—In the Singular. A compartment or inclosed space; also a hollow or cavity;⁹ a room or apartment in a house; a private repository,¹⁰ a sleeping apartment.¹¹ Sometimes the word is used to designate a court, a commission, or an association of persons habitually meeting together in an apartment, for example, "star chamber," "chamber of deputies," "chamber of commerce."¹²

Chamber of accounts. In French law, a sovereign court of great antiquity which took cognizance of and registered the accounts of the king's revenue; nearly the same as the English court of exchequer.¹³

Chamber of commerce. A board or association to promote the commercial interests of a locality, a country, or the like; a society of the principal merchants and traders of a city who meet to promote the general trade and commerce of the place.¹⁴ A "chamber of commerce" has been compared with a "board of trade," see Board 11 C.J.S. p 370 note 18, and both compared with and distinguished from a "business league," see Business 12 C.J.S. p 804 notes 61, 62.

"Coking chamber." A semi-cylindrical or tubular retort [in a Paris gas-retort], which lies horizontally across the furnace structure, and holds several hundred pounds of coal, in the process of producing coke.¹⁵

Widow's chamber. A portion of the effects of a deceased person, reserved for the use of his widow, and consisting of her apparel and the furniture of her bed-chamber, is called in London the "widow's chamber."¹⁶

Other phrases: "Entirely inclosed within the covered chamber" and "internal recess or chamber."¹⁷

—Chambers [of judge]. Any place in which a judge hears motions, signs papers, or does other business pertaining to his office, when he is not holding a session of court, or the private room or office of a judge, where, for the convenience of parties, he hears such matters and transacts such business as a judge in vacation is authorized to hear, and which do not require a hearing by the judge sitting as a court and it has been said that, for the purpose of jurisdiction, the chambers of a judge are wherever he happens to be, in his circuit or district, when the exigencies of the case call for the transaction of chamber business;¹⁸ and that the word may be used interchangeably with "vacation."¹⁹

Phrases: "At chambers,"²⁰ "at his chambers,"²¹ "in chambers,"²² "in the judge's chambers,"²³

I. IN GENERAL

§ 1. Definitions and Elements

- a. Champerty
- b. Maintenance

a. Champerty

Champerty consists of an agreement whereby a person without interest in another's suit undertakes to carry it on at his own expense, in whole or in part, in consideration of receiving, in the event of success, a part of the proceeds of the litigation.

At common law champerty is defined to be a bargain by the terms of which a person having otherwise no interest in the subject matter of an action undertakes to carry on the suit at his own expense, or to aid in so doing, in consideration of receiving, in the event of success, some part of the land, property, or money recovered or deriving some benefit therefrom.¹ To constitute champerty it is essential that there be an agreement and undertaking² by one person to defray, in whole or in part, the expenses of another's suit³ and by the latter person to divide with the former the fruits of the litigation in the event it proves successful.⁴ It is not material at what time a person becomes a party to a champertous contract; if he becomes a party to it at any stage of its execution, he will, in contemplation of law, be deemed to have been a party to it from its inception.⁵ While it is not essential that there be an action pending at the time the contract is entered into,⁶ it is essential that a suit be contemplated; an agreement which does not provide for the prosecution or defense of a suit may be fraudulent, or for some other reason illegal, but it cannot be champertous.⁷ Conversely, it is sufficient that there is an action pending or contemplated when the bargain is entered into.⁸

Direct or collateral champerty

A distinction is to be made between direct and collateral champerty in that collateral champerty is exterior to the suit and, although affording a motive for carrying on the litigation, is not directly involved in it as matter for decision or adjudication in the pending controversy.—Reed v. James, 11 S.E. 401, 84 Ga. 380.

(2) However, champerty cannot be predicated on the mere intention of one person to commit an act of champerty; there cannot be a champertous act, or an act partaking of the nature of champerty, without the concurrence of at least two minds.—*Adams v. b. Maintenance

Maintenance exists when a person without interest in a suit officiously intermeddles therein by assisting either party with money or otherwise to prosecute or defend it.

Maintenance is an officious intermeddling in a suit that in no way belongs to one, by maintaining or assisting either party with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend it;⁹ an unlawful taking in hand or upholding of quarrels or sides to the disturbance or hindrance of common right.¹⁰ It is of the essence of maintenance that there should be a suit or an antagonistic proceeding between parties, which, according to some authorities, must actually be pending;¹¹ and it is further necessary that assistance is to be rendered in the litigation;¹² but it is not necessary that defendant be deprived of any just ground of defense.¹³

§ 2. Distinction between Champerty and Maintenance

Champerty is maintenance with the additional feature of an agreement for the payment of compensation or personal profit from the subject matter of the suit.

Champerty is a species of maintenance,¹⁴ but differs therefrom in that it involves compensation¹⁵ or personal profit¹⁶ to be paid or derived from the thing sued for, or a part thereof, and a bargain or agreement therefor.¹⁷

§ 3. Origin and History

Rules against champerty and maintenance existed under the early law; and such rules have survived to a varying extent in many, although not all, jurisdictions; but, while the principles may remain, there is a marked tendency to lessen the rigor and inflexibility of their application and temper the severity of their results.

Existing laws as to champerty and maintenance have come from the far past.¹⁸ As noted in an American decision, by the Roman law it was a species of crimen falsi to enter into any confederacy or to do any act to support another's lawsuit, by money, witnesses, or patronage.¹⁹ Also, as stated in American decisions, the various statutes enacted in England concerning champerty and maintenance were in substance merely declaratory of the common law, the fundamental principles of the law on this subject being well established prior to the statutes.²⁰ The offense has always been considered as one against public justice,²¹ and as having a manifest tendency to oppression;²² and the general purpose of the law against champerty and maintenance was to prevent officious intermeddlers from stirring up strife and contention by vexatious and speculative litigation²³ which would disturb the peace of society, lead to corrupt practices, and prevent the remedial process of the law.²⁴ The power of influential persons to whom rights of action were transferred in order to obtain their support and favor in suits brought to assert those rights was the cause of the rigid doctrine of the early common law.²⁵

The court of chancery in the main followed the courts of law in treating champerty and maintenance in all its forms as illegal, and went further in some respects, giving relief against, or refusing to enforce, transactions not strictly involving cham-

erty or maintenance, but savoring of it.²⁶

The courts of the states of the United States having the English common law as a basis of their systems of jurisprudence differ as to the extent to which the principles of the common law and the provisions of the early English statutes should be deemed to have been introduced into their respective systems; in some of the states the common-law doctrine seems to have been accepted by the courts in general;²⁷ in others it has never been adopted or become a part of their system of jurisprudence;²⁸ and in still others, if ever accepted, it was accepted and exists only in part or has been superseded or modified by local legislation.²⁹ At any rate, in jurisdictions where the common-law doctrine has survived, the reasons which induced a strict application are now so far abated that the modern application is not so rigorous or inflexible, nor is it always attended by the same result, as under the early common law. The tendency of the decisions is to depart from the severity of the old law and at the same time to preserve the principle which tends to defeat the mischief to which the old law was directed.³⁰

§ 4. What Law Governs

With some exceptions, the law of the state in which a contract is to be performed is to be applied in determining whether or not the contract is champertous.

The question as to whether a contract is champertous or not is as a general rule governed by the law of the state in which the contract is to be performed;³¹ but, where the court is without information as to where the contract was made or is to be performed, it may be constrained to apply the general rules of the common law.³² It has been denied that a court is required by any rule of comity to enforce a contract entered into in another state where such contract, if entered into in the state of the forum, would not only be champertous but the entering into it would be criminal.³³

II. CONTRACTS AND CONVEYANCES PROHIBITED

§ 5. Assignments of Rights of Action

Apart from statute, the taking, in good faith and for a valuable consideration, of a transfer or assignment of a right of action is not champerty; and subsequent litigation for the collection of the claim, or the protection of the thing, assigned is not maintenance.

While, as stated in the C.J.S. title Assignments

§ 3, at the early common law the assignment of choses in action was regarded as violative of the rule against champerty and maintenance, it is now the accepted doctrine that the bona fide purchaser or assignee of a mere right of action is not guilty of champerty or maintenance,³⁴ except in cases where the rule has been changed by statute, infra §§ 8-10, or except, in some jurisdictions, where the cause of action assigned arose ex delicto, infra § 6.

An assignment of a claim is not rendered illegal by the mere fact that litigation is necessary for collection,³⁵ nor will the fact that it may become necessary for the assignee to institute legal proceedings to protect the thing assigned from unjust claims brought against it invest the transaction with the character of maintenance.³⁶ Indeed, an assignment for the express purpose of bringing suit may not be champertous; an assignment of the causes of action of several adjoining landowners to one person for the purpose of bringing one action for the determination of the issues involved is not open to the objection of champerty.³⁷ Also, the assignment of a claim to a collection agent with the intent that the assignee will bring suit thereon will not be declared illegal and void as against public policy where the right of a collection agent to take an assignment of a claim and bring suit thereon in his own name has been long recognized in the state, both by statute and by decisions, and where, although there is a statute forbidding an attorney from buying any evidence of debt or thing in action, with intent to bring suit thereon, there is no similar provision as to collection agents.³⁸

However, a transfer may be champertous in nature where it is merely temporary and colorable and not in good faith³⁹ or where there is no consideration therefor other than a promise of the transferee to pay the transferor a part of any recovery

that may be obtained.⁴⁰

The acquisition, by assignment or transfer, of a further interest in the subject matter of a suit, by a person who already has an interest therein is considered infra § 26.

§ 6. — Particular Rights Assigned

There is some divergence of authority as to the champertous character of the assignment of a bare right of action arising ex delicto. Other rights or titles may be assigned without violating the rules against champerty and maintenance.

The assignment of a cause of action arising ex delicto is regarded by some,⁴¹ although not by other,⁴² courts as champertous. Also, the assignment of a bare right to file a bill in equity for a fraud committed on the assignor is void, being contrary to public policy and savoring of the character of maintenance;⁴³ but a bill by the purchaser of a mortgagor's equity of redemption to set aside a foreclosure sale because of fraud does not come within this rule,⁴⁴ the transfer of an interest to which a right to sue is incident not being objectionable;⁴⁵ and in some states the champerty doctrine has not been adopted.⁴⁶

An action by a bona fide assignee or transferee of an equitable title is not open to the objection of champerty or maintenance, even though there is a contest by the holder of the legal title.⁴⁷

The acquisition of an execution by transfer after levy and pending advertisement of the property levied on for sale is not champertous, despite the fact that another person lays claim to the execution.⁴⁸

Transfer by bankruptcy trustee to bankrupt mortgagor

Bankruptcy trustee's transfer to bankrupt of rights of redemption in respect of property sold under a mortgage executed by the bankrupt is not champertous in that the right of action to have the foreclosure sale vacated arose out of a tort and is nonassignable, where the alleged tort was committed against the bankrupt before his adjudication, and as against the mortgagee, the case stands as though bankruptcy had not intervened.—De Merville v. § 7. — Effect of Indemnity against Costs

An agreement of the assignee of part of a cause of action to pay the costs is not obnoxious where he gives some other substantial consideration or where, prior to, and independent of, the assignment, he had an interest in the subject matter. In the absence of these features, the agreement is champertous according to the common-law rule; but this rule is no longer in force in some states.

At common law the assignment of part of a cause of action in consideration of the payment of the costs of the suit was void as champerty and maintenance;⁴⁹ but it is said that this rule no longer obtains.⁵⁰ At any rate, an assignment under an agreement that the assignee will enforce or collect the note or claim at his own expense and pay the assignor a share of the proceeds is not champertous where the assignee gives some other substantial consideration,⁵¹ or where, prior to, and independent of, the assignment and agreement, he had a real and proper interest in the cause of action on the note or claim and, therefore, is not a mere volunteer.⁵²

§ 8. — Special Statutory Provisions in General

By force of statute, the taking by a corporation of an assignment of a claim for the purpose of bringing suit thereon may be unlawful.

When prohibited by statute, the taking by a corporation of assignments for the purpose of bringing suits on claims which prove otherwise uncollectable is unlawful.⁵³

§ 9. — Purchase of Litigious Rights by Public Officers

To render applicable a statute prohibiting the purchase by public officers connected with courts of justice of litigious rights within the jurisdiction of the tribunal in which they exercise their functions, it is essential that a right be purchased by an officer or employee of a court and that the right be actually involved in a pending contested suit.

A statute providing that public officers connected with courts of justice, such as judges, advocates, attorneys, clerks, and sheriffs, cannot purchase litigious rights which fall under the jurisdiction of the tribunal in which they exercise their functions, under penalty of nullity, and of having to defray all costs, damages, and interest, will, when applicable, be accorded effect;⁵⁴ but, being in restraint of individual right, it must be strictly interpreted and applied only to the parties intended to be reached.⁵⁵ Its application does not extend to a purchase of a claim by a person who is not an officer or employee of the court;⁵⁶ and a right is not litigious merely because it may give rise to litigation, or because a lawsuit is apparently necessary to enforce it; there must be a suit actually pending,⁵⁷ which actually involves the right in question,⁵⁸ and there must be a contest in the suit.⁵⁹ Promissory notes are not rendered litigious by being transferred for a low price.⁶⁰

§ 10. — Purchase by Attorney of Claim with Intent to Sue Thereon

The application of a statute making it unlawful for an attorney to buy a chose in action with intent to bring an action thereon is restricted to cases where an attorney purchases a chose in action for the sole or primary purpose of bringing an action thereon in the state for his own benefit.

A statute making it unlawful for an attorney to buy, or to be in any manner interested in buying,

It will therefore be seen that the article was passed in the interest of the trans-feror and plaintiff creditor and of the defendant and debtor, and not of the transferee."—Swords v. Cortinas, supra.

a chose in action with the intent, and for the purpose, of bringing an action thereon is a legislative recognition of the impropriety of allowing an attorney, who has it in his power to encourage or frown on litigation, to acquire control of claims and nurse to life and activity one which might otherwise be disposed of without litigation or oppression; and its aim is to prevent attorneys from oppressing debtors and making costs.⁶¹ It is in effect an adoption of the common-law rule,⁶² hereinafter enunciated in § 14. As stated in the C.J.S. title Attorney and Client § 46, such a statute is valid, but is strictly construed. It is accorded effect when,⁶³ and only when,⁶⁴ it is applicable.

The intent with which the purchase is made or the assignment is taken is controlling;⁶⁵ it is essential to the application of the statute not only that the purchase be made with the intent, and for the purpose, of bringing suit on the purchased claim,⁶⁶ but also that this be the sole,⁶⁷ or at least the primary, and not the incidental or contingent,⁶⁸ purpose; and, furthermore, the intent must be to bring suit for the benefit of the attorney⁶⁹ in a court other than a justice's court,⁷⁰ or a court of another state.⁷¹

Even though an attorney has taken an assignment of a claim with the purpose denounced by the statute, and his assignee, a layman, has knowledge thereof, the latter has good title, the right of enforcement in him having none of the mischief sought to be prevented by the statute.⁷²

Sale of goods in adverse possession of another generally see C.J.S. ti-

he sale is voluntary and direct, or involuntary and indirect as the result of conversion and the subsequent satisfaction of the tort.⁷⁴ In some jurisdictions, however, this doctrine is not recognized.⁷⁵ Even in jurisdictions where such assignment is considered champertous otherwise, if the possession of the third person was derived from and held in subordination to that of the owner, as in the case of a bailment, such owner may sell or assign the chattel, and his vendee will have the right to sue for its recovery on the wrongful withholding of possession.⁷⁶ Further, where the assignor conveyed an equitable interest before the adverse possession commenced, and afterward transfers the legal title to his assignee, the transfer is valid.⁷⁷ In a particular case a claimant may not have such actual, exclusive, adverse possession as will bring the case within the rule against maintenance.⁷⁸

§ 12. — Judicial Sales

A judicial sale, or sale by an officer under legal process, of property in adverse possession is not within the rule against maintenance.

The rule against maintenance, where the property in question is in adverse possession at the time of the sale, does not apply to a judicial sale or to a sale made by a public officer under legal process.⁷⁹

§ 13. Contracts between Attorney and Client in General

A contract between attorney and client is champertous where it is the result of an act prohibited by statute or where it provides that the attorney shall personally bear the costs and expenses of litigation; but it is not champertous where it is nothing more than a loan of money to the client or an agreement for payment of reasonable compensation for the attorney's services.

While champerty is not confined to attorneys, it arises more frequently in contracts between attorney and client than in contracts between laymen.⁸⁰ A contract between attorney and client is champertous where it provides that the attorney shall bear or pay the costs or expenses of a suit or proceeding to enforce the client's rights,⁸¹ or where it is the result of an act prohibited by statute,⁸² such as the solicitation, by the attorney or his employee, of the client to engage the attorney to prosecute a claim for damages for negligence,⁸³ or the giving, or promising to give, a valuable consideration as an inducement or consideration for the placing of a demand in the hands of the attorney for the purpose of bringing suit or making demand thereon.⁸⁴ Also, any agreement between a creditor and his attorney by which either is to collect from the debtor, under the guise of attorney's fees, more than the attorney is to receive for his services is champertous.⁸⁵

On the other hand, a mere agreement between attorney and client for the payment by the latter to the former of reasonable compensation for the former's services is not champertous;⁸⁶ a contract between attorney and client is not champertous because it grows out of an offer of the attorney to defend the client in litigation already commenced;⁸⁷ and it is neither against public policy nor champertous for an attorney to lend his client money after the relationship of attorney and client already exists, and the loan forms no part of the inducement to bring about that relationship or to induce the client to engage in litigation, and there is no contract of indemnity against the client's liability for costs.⁸⁸

Although an attorney may be disbarred under the statutory code of ethics for soliciting business, or may be prosecuted for barratry for soliciting business in violation of statute, the attorney's contract with client, fixing compensation to be received, when entered into without fraud, deception, or misrepresentation on the part of the attorney, and with the attorney and client dealing with each other at arm's length, is not against public policy.—Beck v. Boucher, 195 P. 996, 114 Wash. 574.

bargaining in determining whether the agreement between them is champertous;⁸⁹ but in other states statutes have the effect of abolishing in part the common-law doctrine of champerty and maintenance relating to contracts for compensation between attorney and client and are intended to place the attorney, as to his contracts with his clients, on the same footing and with the same freedom of contract as other persons in the business world.⁹⁰

§ 14. — Assignments or Purchases of Subject Matter of Suit

There is champerty where an attorney acquires, by purchase or absolute assignment, the res of a suit from his client with the intent to carry on the litigation at his own expense and for his own benefit; but there is no champerty where an attorney takes from his client an assignment of an interest in the subject matter of a suit as security for payment for his services or in payment of a precedent debt or services actually rendered, or where, after final judgment, he acquires an interest in property which was in controversy.

It is a general rule that it is champerty for an attorney to purchase, or take an absolute assignment of, the res of a suit from his client with the intent to carry on the litigation at his own expense and for his own benefit.⁹¹ On the other hand, it is not champerty for a client to assign to his attorney an interest in the subject matter of the suit as security for payment for his services,⁹² or in payment of a precedent debt or for services actually rendered;⁹³

and, unless it is provided otherwise by statute,⁹⁴ an attorney may, after final⁹⁵ judgment, properly acquire a part of, or an interest in, property which was in controversy, but is no longer in litigation.⁹⁶ An attorney who has been dismissed after performing considerable work in prosecuting a claim, but before its final disposition, and who, by reason of a valid and nonchampertous contract for a contingent fee, has an interest in the subject matter of the suit may purchase the interest of plaintiff and thereafter prosecute the suit himself without being guilty of champerty or maintenance.⁹⁷ Where, in a partition suit, there is no contention as to the title of plaintiff and his right to demand partition, a deed from him to his attorney is not champertous.⁹⁸

§ 15. — Agreements Not to Settle or Compromise

In many, although not all, states a contractual provision against compromise or settlement without the consent of the attorney is champertous and void; and according to some, but not other, decisions the entire contract is invalidated by the provision.

Except in a few jurisdictions,⁹⁹ a contract with an attorney, in which it is agreed that the attorney shall prosecute the claim and receive a fee from the amount to be recovered and that the claim shall not be compromised or settled without the consent of the attorney, is champertous and void.¹ As stated in the C.J.S. title Attorney and Client § 186 b (2), such a contractual provision is generally regarded as against public policy. Whether the entire contract is rendered void is a matter as to which there is a conflict of authority; in some jurisdictions such a stipulation invalidates the whole contract, being regarded as inseparable and as the inducement on which the contract was entered into,² while in other jurisdictions it is held that such a stipulation may be disregarded without vitiating the entire contract,³ but even in the latter jurisdictions the entire contract is invalid where it contains several other objectionable features, the bare contract of employment and the fixing of the fee are inextricably involved with, and dependent on, the objectionable features, and to expurgate from the contract all of the objectionable features would so far change its tenor and effect that it cannot be assumed that it would have been entered into at all by the parties in such form.⁴ A valid contract to give an attorney a certain per cent of any amount recovered is not rendered invalid by another contract between the parties binding the client not to settle without the attorney's consent.⁵

§ 16. — Contracts with Political Body

According to the features thereof, a contract between an attorney and a political body may or may not be champertous.

The contract of an attorney with a state or other political body for a fee contingent on the amount recovered is not champertous⁶ where there is no agreement by the attorney to pay any part of the court costs;⁷ but it is otherwise where the attorney assumes the burden of carrying on the litigation and paying the costs and expenses thereof at his own peril; and the court will not hesitate to declare the contract illegal and void where, during the pendency of the litigation, the attorney resigned the office of state's attorney and abandoned the prosecution of the claim in that capacity, for which he could not be paid anything except his regular salary, in order to accept an appointment as private attorney and receive a reward and compensation that otherwise he would not have received as state's attorney in the performance of his official duty.⁸ There is no champerty or maintenance where there is no contract of employment, the attorney acting as an officer of the state under appointment as a special attorney general, and where there is no recovery to be shared, an injunction only being sought in the suit.⁹

§ 17. Contracts with Attorneys for Contingent Fees

Apart from statute, a contract between attorney and client which merely provides for a contingent fee and does not embrace any additional obnoxious feature is generally not considered as champertous.

Effect will, of course, be accorded applicable statutory provisions under which agreements between clients and attorneys whereby the latter are to conduct the litigation and to receive as their compensation a certain percentage of the thing recovered in case of success, and nothing in case they were unsuccessful, are either champertous¹⁰ or lawful,¹¹ as the case may be. As appears in the C.J.S. title Attorney and Client § 186 b (1), agreements between attorney and client for contingent fees, when fair and reasonable as to the client and when not procured by fraud or imposition, are generally deemed valid as against objections other than those of champerty; and, in the absence of an applicable statute condemning them and without some additional feature, they are generally considered as not champertous per se;¹² but there are decisions to the contrary.¹³ As hereinafter noted in § 18, a contingent fee contract, which is not champertous in and of itself, may become champertous, at least in a majority of jurisdictions, by the insertion therein of an undertaking by the attorney to pay, or save the client harmless from, costs and expenses.

Claims against government. Contracts between attorneys and their clients to prosecute, before the proper authorities—auditors, boards, committees, commissioners, departments, and the like—claims against the government, or, before boards of arbitration, claims against other countries, and to receive therefor fees conditioned on success or agreed percentages on the amount recovered are not contracts to conduct litigation in the courts in the ordinary sense and are not champertous.¹⁴

§ 18. — Where Attorney Defrays Costs

In most jurisdictions a contract for a contingent fee is considered champertous where it embodies an agreement that the attorney shall pay, or protect the client from payment of, the costs and expenses of the litigation.

Except in some jurisdictions,¹⁵ a contract between attorney and client by which the former agrees, in consideration of having a part of the money or thing recovered, to support at his own expense the litigation of the latter, or to indemnify the latter against costs and charges, is regarded as champertous,¹⁶ except where the attorney has an interest in the subject matter of the suit.¹⁷

Fee not wholly contingent

An agreement to pay an attorney a retainer in a specific amount and one third of the sum received in settlement is not champertous where there is no agreement or understanding that the attorney shall prosecute the claim at his own expense or that he shall look alone for the payment of his fees to the amount recovered and that his services shall not constitute a debt against the client.—Walsh v. Contract for prosecution of claim against government Ind.—Coquillard v. Bearss, 21 Ind. 479, 83 Am.D. 362.

Statutes not changing rule

An attorney is not given the right to contract to pay costs by statutes which permit him to make a contract for a contingent fee, or which provide that the compensation shall be "governed by agreement, express or implied, which is not restrained by law."—Taylor v. Perkins, 157 S.W. 122, 171 Mo.App. 246.

17. Mass.—Reed v. Chase, 130 N.E. 257, 238 Mass. 83.

Interest in judgment appealed from

Where a judgment has been recovered, of which the attorney and the client under their agreement each owns one half, an agreement by the attorney to pay the costs of appeal in event of reversal, in consideration of the interest on the judgment and statutory damages, is not against public policy.—Grace v. Floyd, 61 So. 694, 104 Miss. 613.

An agreement for the payment of costs out of the amount of the contingent fee otherwise payable is not champertous where it is construed to be nothing more than the fixing of the fee at a sum equal to a specified part of the amount recovered, less costs.¹⁸

§ 19. — Where Client Defrays Costs

An ordinary contingent fee contract, not containing any undertaking by the attorney to pay costs and expenses or to indemnify the client against payment, is generally considered not to be champertous.

Where the attorney does not undertake to support the litigation at his own expense, or to indemnify the client against costs and charges, but merely agrees to render the ordinary services of an attorney, in consideration of receiving a percentage of the money or a part of the thing recovered, the agreement is considered, in the majority of jurisdictions, as not being champertous.¹⁹ There are decisions, however, to the effect that such an arrangement is champertous.²⁰

§ 20. — Where Costs Are Advanced as a Loan

It is not champerty for an attorney to loan his client money for payment of costs.

It is neither against public policy nor champertous for an attorney to loan his client money with which to pay costs of suit, nor to advance money necessary to carry on the suit as needed, when such advances are made as a loan, with the express or implied understanding or agreement for its repayment, and there is no contract of indemnity against the client's liability to pay costs.²¹ Indeed, the claim of an attorney for such advances is one favored by the law and protected as far as practicable by a lien implied by the law itself in his favor.²²

§ 21. — Where Fee Is Lien on Judgment

An agreement of the client to pay the attorney a certain fee to be retained by the attorney out of the money collected is not champertous.

Under statutes prohibiting attorneys from contracting for contingent fees it has been held that a contract by an attorney to conduct a suit, the client agreeing to pay him a certain amount to be retained by the attorney out of the money when collected, is not champertous.²³

§ 22. Contracts between Laymen in General

In most jurisdictions it is champerty for a person who is without interest in a suit, and is not a party or an attorney or relative of a party, to intrude and speculate in the litigation by agreeing to defray the expenses, or to give aid and support in the preparation and prosecution, of the suit in consideration of a share of the recovery or the proceeds thereof.

By the common law, and in most of the states which have adopted the common law or enacted statutes on the subject, an agreement by a third person, other than an attorney or relative of a party, to defray the expenses of a suit in which he has no interest, or to give substantial support in aid thereof, in consideration of a share of the recovery or the proceeds thereof, is champertous, it being an intrusion in litigation for the mere purpose of speculation;²⁴

Lease of land recovered

A lease for a sum of money, which was inconsiderable or nominal as compared with the value of the interest acquired under the lease, the real consideration being that the lessee, by bringing suit for injunction, would litigate the title with persons in possession of the land and pay all costs and expenses, and in event of success have the right to turpentine the timber while lessor should have the land, was cham-

but in some jurisdictions such contracts have been sustained.²⁵ The majority rule does not, of course, apply where the facts do not bring the case within it.²⁶

§ 23. — Agreement to Furnish Evidence

An agreement by a person without prior interest in a claim or controversy becomes champertous or contrary to public policy when, instead of being confined to the furnishing of information already possessed by such person or to mere accounting work or an unrestricted search for bona fide witnesses and legitimate evidence, it contemplates litigation and, for a share of the recovery, calls for the procurement of evidence essential to success.

Whether or not an agreement to furnish evidence or information is champertous or against public policy turns largely on the facts and circumstances of the particular case; and it is said that no one rule or statement is determinative of the question.²⁷

A contract may be champertous or contrary to public policy where it contemplates litigation and the promotion or influencing thereof, as where, for a share of the recovery or for compensation contingent on the successful outcome of the suit, a person agrees to collect, procure, and furnish evidence of a particular character or such evidence as is necessary to win the case; such a contract is objectionable in that it holds out an inducement or temptation to commit fraud or perjury or to procure others to do so.²⁸

On the other hand, although compensation is contingent on the amount eventually collected or recovered, an agreement is not champertous or against public policy where its object and tendency is not to promote successful litigation, but merely to place a person in possession of the true facts concerning his affairs and accounts,²⁹ as where the informant merely agrees to turn over information already possessed by him, as distinguished from gathering information thereafter that will produce litigation,³⁵ or where he is to search for bona fide witnesses and legitimate evidence, not restricted to a particular kind to accomplish a certain result,³¹ or he is to find property of a judgment debtor on which execution may be levied,³² or he is merely to perform work of an accounting nature and litigation is not contemplated.³³ The foregoing is especially true where the person supplying information does not obligate himself to give any testimony³⁴ and it does not appear that he will be a necessary witness or, if he does testify, that his testimony will be of sufficient weight and materiality to characterize the contract as one intended to influence litigation.³⁵ Moreover, a mere agreement or understanding that a person already interested in a controversy may qualify or be called as a witness does not invalidate a contract.³⁶

26. Unobjectionable transactions

(1) A transaction between a third person and heirs and devisees was held not champertous where all that appeared was that, after the will was sustained, the third person purchased the interests of the devisees and heirs for a cash consideration and agreed to pay the fee of contestees' attorneys, which had been adjudged a lien on the land, and there was no showing that the conveyances were made in consideration of services to be rendered by him in aiding in the prosecution or defense of the will contest or that it was agreed that any part of the property involved was to be taken or received by him for such services.—Columbus Mining Co. v. Combs, 26 S.W.2d 26, 233 Ky. 476.

(2) In an action for breach of a contract to purchase a motortruck, the trial court properly refused to dismiss an answer and counterclaim for money paid plaintiff, although another truck company, when selling defendant a truck, "agreed to assume the responsibility should any trouble arise from the cancellation of" plaintiffs' truck order where there was no showing that the other truck company did anything to stir up strife and quarrels between plaintiff and defendant or to assist and maliciously advise or assist defendant to prosecute his defenses or counterclaim.—Rathmann v. Schwanz, 175 N.W. 812, 170 Wis. 459.

§ 24. — Benevolent Aid

Assistance of a poor person in litigation without speculation in the outcome is not champerty or maintenance.

It is not maintenance for a person to furnish assistance, in money or otherwise, to a poor man to enable him to carry on his suit.³⁷ However, such a transaction must be entered into with the view of subserving the ends of justice alone, and if it is turned to the purpose of speculation by a stipulation for a share of the verdict or judgment it will amount to champerty.³⁸

§ 25. — Employment of Nonprofessional Agents

An agent may be employed in good faith without violation of the rules against champerty and maintenance.

There may be no champerty or maintenance where there is no officious intermeddling in a lawsuit or purpose of stirring up strife or litigation, but merely an employment in good faith of an agent, trustee, or other representative to attend to, or to aid and assist, or act for, the principal in, the investigation, collection, compromise, settlement, or enforcement of a claim, even though the agent is to pay, or indemnify against, costs and expenses or is to share in the amount collected or recovered.³⁹

§ 26. — Effect of Interest

Champerty or maintenance cannot properly be charged against a person who has, or reasonably supposes that he has, an interest in the subject matter of a suit of another and such interest existed prior to, and was acquired otherwise than through, an agreement for the promotion of the suit.

Where a person promoting the suit of another has any interest whatever, legal or equitable, in the thing demanded, distinct from that which he may acquire by an agreement with the suitor, he is in effect also a suitor according to the nature and extent of his interest. It is accordingly a principle that any interest whatever in the subject matter of the suit is sufficient to exempt a party giving aid to the suitor from the charge of illegal maintenance. Whether this interest is great or small, vested or contingent, certain or uncertain, it affords a just reason to the party who has such an interest to participate in the suit of another.⁴⁰ Indeed, one may lawfully agree to promote a suit where he has reasonable grounds to believe himself interested, although in fact he is not interested.⁴¹ While the interest which will exempt a person from champ-

Quasi-corporate trust arrangement

A trust arrangement, quasi-corporate in form, does not violate a champerty statute where, although the trustee is to be paid in shares of the capitalized property involved, he is, to earn his compensation, to perform a variety of services, of which the prosecution of a suit, if one is brought, may be but a small part, and he is to pay nothing on account of any expense involved except in the remote way of depreciation of his interest by the raising of expense money on the security of the whole property.—W. C. Belcher Land Mortg. Co. v. Hazard Coal Corporation, C.C.A.Ky., 15 F.2d 481.

ty or maintenance must have existed or been acquired in some way other than through the contract for the promotion of the suit,⁴² a person having such a preëxisting interest in the subject matter of the suit may, without being guilty of maintenance, buy the interest of plaintiff or defendant pendente lite and thereafter prosecute or defend the suit himself⁴³ or, without violating the law, he may take an assignment of a chose in action to strengthen his own interest.⁴⁴

Creditors, stockholders, bondholders, or other persons having a common interest in the subject matter of a suit may properly unite their interests and take concerted action either by prosecuting or defending together or by agreeing that one or a committee shall sue or defend for the benefit of all.⁴⁵

Party of record. While a statute directed against a contract by a person not a party of record to a suit to render services or assistance in the suit for a share of the recovery, does not apply, generally speaking, to a contract by a party of record, it does apply to a contract made by a person in his individual capacity where he is a party of record only in a representative capacity.⁴⁶

§ 27. — Effect of Relationship

Provided he does not do so for the purpose of speculation, a kinsman of a suitor may render aid in the prosecution or defense of a suit without being guilty of champerty or maintenance.

A person who is related by ties of consanguinity or affinity to either of the parties to a suit may rightfully assist in the prosecution or defense of such suit either by furnishing counsel or by contributing to the expense thereof;⁴⁷ but the reason for the rule ceases and the rule is not applicable where a kinsman meddles in or maintains the suit for the purpose of personal speculation or profit.⁴⁸ Otherwise stated, relationship by blood or marriage may justify maintenance,⁴⁹ but not champerty.⁵⁰

§ 28. Contracts to Procure Claims for Collection

A contract between an attorney and a layman whereby, in consideration of a share of the attorney's fee or something else of value, the layman undertakes, to procure the employment of the attorney by a third person to collect a claim or prosecute a suit is champertous or contrary to public policy.

Both under statute and otherwise, a contract between an attorney and a layman whereby, for a share of the attorney's fee or some other valuable consideration, the layman is to procure the employment of the attorney by a third person to collect a claim or prosecute a suit is champertous or against public policy.⁵¹ The fact that such person's compensation is made contingent on his success is generally held to be an additional reason for holding the contract illegal, as it places the agent under an inducement to use corrupt means, if necessary, to accomplish the desired result.⁵² In some instances, however, the court may not find it necessary to condemn the contract or arrangement in question, as where the champerty, if any, is in another contract between the attorney and client,⁵³ the contract in question is not the one between the attorney and

Foundation and design of doctrine

"The common-law doctrine . . . was founded partly upon the peculiar nature of livery of seisin under the ancient common law, and partly upon on considerations of public policy. The doctrine was designed to prevent trafficking in dormant titles, thereby causing vexatious and unwarranted litigation against those properly in adverse possession. . . . The doctrine was established, not for offense, but for the defense of lawful possessory rights." —Farrington v. Greer, 113 So. 722, 725, 94 Fla. 457.

Purpose of statutes is to discourage litigation, by prohibiting one who has a doubtful title and who is not willing to sue on his title from selling it to another, and thus encourage strife.—Perry v. Wilson, 208 S.W. 776, 183 Ky. 155.

Lack of possession, or taking of rents and profits, by grantor for one year

Any citizen may lawfully contribute to the payment of the lawful expenses of a criminal prosecution and the act will not subject him to the charge of maintenance.⁵⁷ Whether the private employment of an attorney to aid the official attorney in a criminal prosecution is against public policy is considered in the C.J.S. title Contracts § 227, also 13 C.J. p 450 notes 57, 58.

§ 30. Conveyances of Land Held Adversely

In some, but not in other, jurisdictions it is champerty to convey lands adversely possessed by a third person.

Both at common law and under statutes which are declaratory of the common law or adopt it with some modifications, a conveyance of land which at the time of the conveyance is possessed adversely by a third person is champertous⁵⁸ and, as shown infra §§ 39, 40, is void, at least as to the person in possession. In a number of jurisdictions the rule is not in force, it either being regarded as obsolete⁵⁹ or having been abrogated by statute,⁶⁰ and engage in the disputes of other persons.—Warner v. Wickizer, 160 P. 885, 61 Okl. 200.

(3) These statutes are similar to an early English statute which has been regarded as not initiating any new policy or as prohibiting what was before permitted, but as merely affirming the common-law doctrine and adding a greater penalty.

but, in some of the jurisdictions wherein it has been annulled by statute, it was in force at one time either as a part of the common law⁶¹ or as a statutory rule,⁶² and in such jurisdictions it may still be resorted to in determining the validity of conveyances made prior to its abrogation. While it has been said that statutes abrogating the common-law rule as to alienations will be liberally construed by the courts,⁶³ it has also been held that a statute making a conveyance of lands adversely held by another champertous is valid, it being within the power of the state to enact and not affecting any right under the federal constitution,⁶⁴ but that such a statute is harsh,⁶⁵ drastic,⁶⁶ and penal in nature,⁶⁷ and should be given a strict, rather than a liberal or enlarged, construction.⁶⁸

§ 31. — Nature and Elements of Adverse Possession

- a. In general
- b. Actual possession
- c. Open and notorious possession
- d. Exclusive possession
- e. Hostile possession
- f. Time and duration of possession
- g. Good faith
- h. Extent of possession

a. In General

The possession of a third person which will render a conveyance champertous is of the same nature and character and comprises the same elements, with the exception of duration for the period prescribed by the statute of limitations, as the adverse possession which results in the acquisition of title.

A rule, either common-law or statutory, making a conveyance of lands adversely possessed by a third person champertous obviously is not applicable where, at the time of the conveyance, there is no adverse possession by a third person,⁶⁹ as where, at such time, the grantor⁷⁰ or the grantee⁷¹ himself is in possession, or, as shown infra § 31 e, where, although a third person is in possession, his possession is not adverse or hostile.

As stated infra § 31 f, it is not necessary, to render a deed champertous, that the adverse possession of a third person continue for the period of time prescribed by the statute of limitations. With this exception and provided, as indicated infra § 31 f, the requisite possession exists at the time of the conveyance, the adverse possession which will render a conveyance champertous embraces the same elements as the adverse possession which results in the acquisition of title. In other words, it is necessary and sufficient that the possession be of such nature and character that, if continued for the statutory period, it would ripen into title.⁷² A more guarded statement sometimes made by the courts is that the adverse possession which will render a conveyance champertous must at least be such pos-

What law governs

The question whether there is such possession by a third person as renders a deed champertous must be determined by the law of adverse possession as it exists at the time of the execution of the deed.—Grayson v. Muckleroy, 124 So. 217, 220 Ala. 182.

session as is required to create title;⁷³ and it is held or stated in a few cases that a possession which is sufficient, if continued long enough, to vest title under the statutes of limitation may not, in some instances, be sufficient to avoid a deed for champerty.⁷⁴

It has been declared that, while there are certain fundamental rules to be followed, there are so many elemental facts entering into the determination of the question of whether there is such adverse possession as authorizes the application of a champerty statute that each case must be determined on its own facts.⁷⁵

Actual possession by a third person of the land conveyed is necessary to render a deed champertous.

The possession of a third person which will avoid a deed for champerty must be actual possession;⁷⁶ a mere constructive possession,⁷⁷ or a mere claim under color of title,⁷⁸ will not suffice. To satisfy the requirement of actual possession pedis possessio, or actual residence on the land, is not necessary.⁷⁹ Cultivation of the land, although sufficient,⁸⁰ is not essential⁸¹ to actual possession. Likewise, while inclosure and occupation of the land are sufficient,⁸² inclosure is not necessary⁸³ where there is a claim to a well-marked or well-defined boundary.⁸⁴ However, the adverse possession must be manifested by some act or fact sufficient to indicate to others that the person claiming to have possession has, in fact, possession.⁸⁵ A taking of possession and an improvement of the land is sufficient for that purpose;⁸⁶ and this may be done either in person or by a tenant, the possession of the latter being by operation of law the possession of the former.⁸⁷ Occupation by claimant, evidenced by working trees for turpentine, has been held to be within the provisions of a statute prohibiting an administrator from selling lands held adversely to the estate.⁸⁸

On the other hand, a mere entry, although it may give possession for some purposes, does not constitute actual possession such as will invalidate a conveyance of land made at any time after the entry and while there is no person or thing on the land indicating actual possession.⁸⁹ Also, such possession as is necessary to invoke a champerty statute is not shown by sporadic acts of ownership⁹⁰ or by acts of incomplete dominion.⁹¹ Particular acts held not to constitute actual possession include: The mere cutting of timber;⁹² the occasional cutting and removal of hay from unoccupied lands under a permit from one claiming title adverse to the true owner;⁹³ the survey of land and

Possession by a third person which is so open, visible, and notorious as to raise a presumption or implication of notice of possession under a claim of title hostile to that of the true owner is necessary to render a deed champertous in the absence of actual knowledge or notice of possession under such a claim.

In the absence of actual knowledge or notice thereof, the possession of a third person which will render a deed champertous must be open, notorious, and visible¹ to such an extent that notice to the true owner,² and, according to some decisions, notice to the purchaser³ or an inquirer or intending purchaser,⁴ will be presumed or implied. The requirement is not complied with by occupancy which is not sufficient to put anyone on inquiry as to the occupant's right in the land.⁵ Mere fugitive acts of ownership exercised at intervals will not suffice.⁶ Where, however, there is such open, notorious, and visible possession that notice of occupancy under a hostile claim may be implied, actual notice to the grantor is not necessary;⁷ and, according to some decisions, actual knowledge on the part of the grantee is not necessary;⁸ but some authorities maintain the contrary view.⁹

Filing notice. Where, by virtue of a statute in force at the time of the execution of a deed claimed to be champertous, a person in possession without color of title or bona fide claim of inheritance is denied the right to claim adverse possession unless he gives notice of such adverse possession and claim by filing in the office of the probate judge of the county in which the lands are situated a written declaration setting forth his claim and describing the real estate of which he claims to be in adverse possession, an occupant who is within the statute and has not complied with it is not in a position to invoke the doctrine of champerty in avoidance of the conveyance in question.¹⁰

d. Exclusive Possession

To render a conveyance champertous, the possession of a third person must be exclusive.

Exclusiveness is an essential element of the adverse possession of a third person which will render a conveyance champertous.¹¹

e. Hostile Possession

The possession by a third person which will render a conveyance champertous must be hostile or adverse; it must be under a claim of title or ownership; but, unless required by statute, it need not be under color of title.

To render the conveyance champertous the possession must be hostile or adverse and not permissive or amicable. A valid conveyance may be made of land in the possession of a third person, if his possession is not adverse to the grantor.¹² Claim of title or ownership is, of course, essential to hostile possession, since in the absence thereof the possession would not be adverse;¹³ but, unless required by an applicable statute in force at the time,¹⁴ color of title in the person holding land adversely to the grantor thereof is not necessary to render the deed champertous.¹⁵ While, in case color of title is required by statute, the title must be one which would sustain the claim, if valid,¹⁶ it is unnecessary that the title be valid.¹⁷

f. Time and Duration of Possession

The requisite adverse possession must exist at the time of the conveyance claimed to be champertous; but it need not have existed for the period prescribed by the statute of limitations or for any other specific length of time.

It is not essential that the adverse possession should have continued for the period requisite to give title by adverse possession or for any specific length of time in order to make a sale and conveyance of land possessed by another champertous;¹⁸ it is necessary and sufficient that the requisite adverse possession exist at the time of the conveyance¹⁹ and also, as indicated infra § 33 a, at the time of a contract to convey where the conveyance is executed in performance of the contract.

g. Good Faith

The authorities are conflicting on the question whether adverse possession, to render a deed champertous, must be in good faith.

The decisions are not in accord on the question whether the adverse possession which renders a deed champertous must be in good faith, some holding it not necessary,²⁰ while others hold it essential.²¹

h. Extent of Possession

The area of land to which adverse possession extends and renders a champerty statute applicable is determined according to principles analogous to those applied in determining the extent of the land to which title is acquired by adverse possession.

Where a third person has actual possession of part of a tract of land, a deed to the whole tract is champertous to, and only to, the extent of the acreage actually possessed by the third person,²²

Inclusion by intruder

Champerty statutes can be invoked in support of an intruder's claim to unless he has color of title to the whole tract, in which case he is deemed to be in possession of, and the deed is champertous as to, all land within the boundary described in the paper constituting his color of title,²³ or unless, according to the rule obtaining in one state, he has a well-marked or well-defined boundary and he claims to that boundary, in which case a champerty statute applies to all land inclosed by that boundary.²⁴ Possession of one lot or tract, or of part thereof, does not extend beyond the boundary thereof to an adjoining lot or tract, so as to render a conveyance of the latter champertous, where clearings, inclosures, or other indicia of possession do not extend onto the adjoining land.²⁵

§ 32. — Application of Rules to Particular Holdings of Real Estate

A person in possession of real property may have such a status or interest, or bear such a relation to the true owner or owners, that his possession is not adverse within the meaning of the law relating to champertous conveyances.

Possession of land by or under a person having a life estate, a dower or quarantine right, or other limited or contingent right, interest, or estate therein is not such adverse possession as will render champertous a conveyance by the remainderman, heir, or other owner.²⁶ The existence of an easement in land is not such adverse possession by the servient tenant as to prevent the owner of the dominant tenement from conveying the right of soil.²⁷ Also, possession by a person who is estopped to deny the title of the actual owner is not such a holding as will affect a deed made by such owner.²⁸

Possession by the state,²⁹ by a public officer,³⁰ or by Indians existing as an independent nation³¹ is not of that adverse character which will render a conveyance champertous.

The possession of a bankrupt is not adverse to the trustee or assignee in bankruptcy,³² the possession of the former owner or of his grantee after a judicial, execution, or tax sale of his land is not adverse to the purchaser,³³ and the possession of a mere trespasser is not adverse to the title of the true owner,³⁴ within the meaning of the law of champerty. A joint possession with another person is not adverse to the other person.³⁵

Possession of surface after severance of title to minerals or caves. Where, by prior conveyance or reservation, the title to minerals has been severed from title to the surface of land, a conveyance of the minerals is not rendered champertous by another person's possession of the surface, as possession of the surface is not possession of the minerals or, if it is, it is only in trust for the benefit of the owner of the minerals and hence is amicable, rather than hostile or adverse.³⁶ A like rule obtains where land only to the extent of whatever inclosure, if any, he had made at the time of the conveyance.—Fordson Coal Co. v. Collins, 104 S.W.2d 985, 268 Ky. 331.

Possession by mortgagor or vendor. Ordinarily, the possession of land by a mortgagor or vendor, or those holding under him, after the execution of the mortgage or conveyance, is not adverse to the mortgagee or the grantee, so as to avoid conveyances made by the latter.³⁸ Possession of the grantor is consistent with, and not hostile to, the title which he has conveyed;³⁹ it is deemed to be the possession of either a tenant or trustee of the grantee; and only an explicit disclaimer of such a relation and a notorious assertion of right in himself will change the character of such possession, and render the grantee's conveyance to a third party champertous.⁴⁰

However, the rule that possession by the vendor after his conveyance is deemed to be amicable to the title he conveyed does not extend to adjoining land which he did not convey; and a subsequent conveyance of such adjoining land by the vendee, when it is possessed by the vendor, is champertous.⁴¹ Also, it has been said that possession by the grantor of a part of the land conveyed may be so adverse to the grantee as to invalidate a conveyance by the latter to a third person of the part so held adversely.⁴² After payment of the debt secured by a mortgage the possession of the mortgagor will be deemed so far adverse to the grantor as to avoid a conveyance made by the latter.⁴³

Possession by tenant or licensee. The possession of a tenant or licensee is presumptively not adverse to his lessor or licensor,⁴⁴ and can become so only by a clear and unequivocal disclaimer brought to the notice of him under whom he holds.⁴⁵ An attornment by a tenant to a stranger, without the consent of the landlord under whom he entered and not pursuant to any judicial decision, is void, and the holding of a tenant so attorned will be treated as the possession of the person under whom he entered;⁴⁶ but where the landlord's right has been terminated by execution sale subsequent to the lease, the law terminates the tendency and justifies the tenant in attorning to the execution purchaser without waiting for eviction.⁴⁷ It has been held that a champerty statute does not apply, in case of a tenant claiming adverse possession, until his title is matured by adverse holding for the period of time required by the statute of limitations.⁴⁸

Possession by tenant in common or his grantee. The possession of a tenant in common is not presumed to be, nor ordinarily regarded as, adverse to his cotenant;⁴⁹ but it may be so in fact,⁵⁰ even though the cotenant is an infant;⁵¹ and possession under a deed given by a tenant in common or joint tenant is adverse to the other tenant.⁵²

Possession by vendee under executory contract. According to the weight of authority, the possession of a vendee holding under an executory contract of purchase is not adverse to that of his vendor until he has performed the conditions of the contract or repudiated his vendee's title,⁵³ the possession of the vendee being in law that of the vendor;⁵⁴ and until performance the vendor may make a valid deed of conveyance effectual as against the

Possession by privies of vendor

Where a vendor has remained in possession, his privies, succeeding to such possession, before they can assert adverse possession or avoid a conveyance of the land by the vendee as champertous, must make open demonstration of their claim sufficient to give notice to the actual owner of the adverse character of their holding, and such as reasonably to put a purchaser on notice thereof.—Travis v. Bruce, 189 S.W. 939, 172 Ky. 390.

Analogous situation

The possession of a person who has assigned a survey and had a patent issued to the assignee as security, and who is looking to the patentee for title, is, until the debt is paid, amicable, rather than adverse, to the patentee and does not invalidate a conveyance from the patentee to a third person; it is analogous to a holding under a bond for title.—Elk Horn Coal Corporation v. vendee.⁵⁵ There are, however, decisions which apparently hold the contrary;⁵⁶ and in any event after the vendee has received a conveyance his possession becomes adverse.⁵⁷

Holding obtained by fraud. In some states possession under a deed procured by fraud is not regarded as adverse, so as to render a subsequent deed champertous;⁵⁸ but in another state, wherein the law of champerty is statutory and contains no exception rendering it inapplicable where the adverse holding is accomplished by fraud, fraud is regarded as immaterial in a case involving a violation of the champerty statute.⁵⁹

§ 33. — Alienations and Contracts Prohibited

- a. Purpose and tendency
- b. Form and nature
- c. Subject matter
- d. Parties
- e. During pendency of litigation

a. Purpose and Tendency

An alienation is prohibited only when it has a tendency to stir up litigation or is within the spirit and policy of a champerty statute and not when it is made in performance of a duty or obligation to convey which arose prior to adverse possession by a third person or by operation of law.

Generally speaking any alienation which has a tendency to stir up litigation or is within the spirit of a champerty statute is prohibited.⁶⁰ Conversely, an alienation not within the spirit and policy of a champerty statute will be upheld wherever possible, unless it is clearly and manifestly within its terms.⁶¹ Champerty statutes are construed not to bar conveyances by grantors under legal or equitable duty or obligation to convey where such duty or obligation arose prior to adverse possession by a third person, or by operation of law, as no litigious intent is imputable in either case and the statutes are not intended to abrogate nonchampertous rights.⁶² Accordingly, where the continued existence of a corporation and its continued ownership of real estate would be contrary to the constitution and laws of the state, and it is in the bona fide process of dissolution, a conveyance made by it, in the accomplishment of such dissolution and division of assets, of land to one stockholder is not champertous, even though the land is adversely possessed by a third person;⁶³ a deed to land in the adverse possession of a third person is not invalid where it is executed in performance of a lawful contract entered into when the land was not so held;⁶⁴ and a deed is not invalid where it is executed to correct mistakes in a conveyance made before the commencement of the adverse possession.⁶⁵

Conveyance with consent of occupant. Where a person holding lands adversely assents to a conveyance or mortgage thereof to a third person, the transaction is not champertous.⁶⁶

b. Form and Nature

A reconveyance or quitclaim deed may be champertous, and so may a mortgage, in some states, and certain classes of contracts. The passage of title by devise

Matters requisite to application of rule

(1) It is only when a deed is made to carry into effect a prior understanding or contract, made when the land was not adversely held, that the deed is not champertous as to those having adverse possession at the time of its execution.—Day v. Hicks, Ky., 124 S.W. 805.

(2) In one case, wherein it was said that the rule contemplates an enforceable contract, that is, a written contract, it was held that, regardless of whether the contract was in writing or parol, the deed in question was champertous, there having been adverse possession not only at the time of the execution of the deed, but also prior to the making of the contract to purchase.—Wallace v. Neal, 11 S.W.2d 1002, 227 Ky. 30.

Principle does not apply to foreclosure sale by the trustee under a deed of trust, as the purchaser under such a sale has no interest until he buys at the sale.—Knox v. Keith, 9 Tenn.App. 614.

Inclusion of additional land

A deed given in lieu of a prior deed is within a champerty statute to the extent that it includes additional property in the possession of a third person under an adverse claim.—Howard v. Howard, 38 S.W.2d 441, 238 Ky. 533.

descent, or by conveyance under decree of court or pursuant of a judicial or official sale, is not champertous.

A quitclaim deed by a person out of possession such an alienation as is prohibited where the land held adversely by a third person.⁶⁷ Also, a conveyance may be champertous,⁶⁸ but is held not to be so where it conveys nothing, as where, by reason of champerty or some other cause, the original conveyance was void.⁶⁹ A mortgage or assignment thereof while the real property mortgaged is adversely held by a third person is champertous,⁷⁰ except in jurisdictions wherein a mortgage is held not to be a conveyance⁷¹ or the giving of a mortgage on land adversely held by another is expressly authorized by statute.⁷²

Neither at common law nor under statute does a rule prohibiting sales or conveyances of lands adversely held by a third person apply to the passage of title by descent⁷³ or devise⁷⁴ or to judicial or official sales or conveyances executed in pursuance thereof or under a decree of court.⁷⁵ However, the champerty statute has been held to apply in the case of a religious corporation making a conveyance pursuant to an order of court obtained on its application.⁷⁶ A court of chancery has no general power to order a sale of property adversely claimed on the application of one of the contestants;⁷⁷ and a title which is champertous remains so notwithstanding a judicial sale.⁷⁸

Contracts. An agreement is champertous where the consideration therefor is a conveyance of land adversely held,⁷⁹ a share of the proceeds of a sale of land so held,⁸⁰ or a share of the land itself on its recovery.⁸¹ On the other hand, an agreement to buy land and to convey an undivided interest to another who is then to bring suit for its recovery and to pay his share of the costs is not champertous.⁸² Similarly, a purchase of land under an agreement whereby the purchaser is to pay a certain price, if he can recover it from those in adverse possession, the proceedings to be instituted in the purchaser's name and at his expense, is valid.⁸³

c. Subject Matter

Any right, title, or interest in land may constitute the subject matter of a prohibited conveyance thereof when the land is held adversely by a third person.

During adverse possession by a third person, a conveyance of standing timber,⁸⁴ an estate in solid minerals,⁸⁵ a life estate,⁸⁶ or the right of dower⁸⁷ or curtesy,⁸⁸ may be champertous; but it is otherwise as to a sale or conveyance of equitable interests,⁸⁹ easements, incorporeal hereditaments, or rights appurtenant to land.⁹⁰

Indian lands. The alienation of restricted Indian lands is controlled by congressional enactments, as stated in the C.J.S. title Indians § 54, also 31 C.J. p 513 note 82-p 516 note 12, and is not subject to state statutes against champerty.⁹¹

d. Parties

With a few exceptions under the law of particular states, a sale or conveyance, during adverse possession by a third person, may be champertous when made by an administrator, a patentee, a tenant in common, other than to another tenant in common, and a trustee, other than to the cestui que trust; but it is not champertous when made by or to the state or by an infant after disaffirmance of a prior conveyance.

Administrator. Under the express prohibition of some statutes, an administrator cannot lawfully sell property held adversely to the estate by a third person.⁹² Such a prohibition, even if applicable to sales by executors, does not extend to a sale by executors to whom the testator devised property in trust with authority to sell.⁹³

Corporation and individual. Where a champerty statute is intended to apply both to the seller and the purchaser, the fact that there may be a technical difficulty in punishing a corporation which executed an instrument does not relieve an individual who received the instrument from the statutory punishment, penalty, or forfeiture.⁹⁴

Infant after disaffirmance. According to some decisions one who is in possession of lands as a purchaser from an infant does not hold adversely to the infant within the meaning of the law against champerty and his possession does not render void a conveyance by the infant to another after he attains majority;⁹⁵ but there are decisions to the contrary.⁹⁶ Of course if the elder grantee has never been in possession, the second conveyance is valid.⁹⁷

Nonresident. Under a statute providing that a conveyance by a nonresident shall not be void when at the time of such conveyance the lands are not adversely held under deed, devise or inheritance, a nonresident may lawfully convey lands held adversely at the time of the sale where the possession is a mere naked possession without title;⁹⁸ but a sale by a nonresident is champertous where the lands are held adversely under color of title,⁹⁹ such as a chancery decree vesting title.¹

Patentees. The purchase by a junior patentee of the title of the elder patentee to lands held adversely to the latter is champertous.²

Purchaser at judicial or official sale. Except where the conveyance is to one for whom he purchased,³ a conveyance by a purchaser at a judicial, execution, or tax sale is champertous when it is made during adverse possession by a third person,⁴ at not when it is made during continued possession by the former owner whose title was divested by the sale, or by some one claiming under him,⁵ and, according to the rule stated supra § 32, such possession is not adverse to the purchaser.

Tenant in common or coparcener. Conveyances by tenants in common or coparceners of land adversely held by their cotenants are, according to the weight of authority, champertous, where it is shown by certain and satisfactory evidence that the tenant in possession has, by specific and unequivocal acts, renounced his allegiance to his cotenants.⁶ Likewise, a conveyance made by a tenant in common while the land is adversely held by a grantee of his cotenant is invalid.⁷ According to some authorities, however, the possession of a tenant in common of land, who has ousted his cotenant and holds adversely to him, will not impair a conveyance by the cotenant of his share.⁸ At any rate, there is no champerty in the absence of acts equivalent to ouster;⁹ and a conveyance by one tenant in common to his cotenant of his undivided interest in and held adversely is not champertous.¹⁰

Trustee and cestui que trust. When a trust relation subsists between the parties, a conveyance by either that merges the legal and equitable estates is valid, although the land is in the actual adverse possession of a third person.¹¹ On the other hand, a conveyance by the trustee to a third person is champertous where at the time of the conveyance there is a holding of the property by the cestui que trust which is in fact adverse to the trustee.¹²

The state. The common-law rule and the statutes making conveyances of land held adversely champertous do not apply to conveyances made by the state, since the state is incapable of being dis-seized;¹³ and it has been held that a statute, making it a misdemeanor to sell a title to land unless the grantor has been in possession or has taken the rents and profits thereof for a year before the covenant to convey was made, does not apply where the title of the grantor comes directly from the state;¹⁴ but it seems that a grant by one state may be champertous as to another state;¹⁵ and the fact that a champertous conveyance is made by the executive officers of a state will not purge it of that vice, as being an act of the state, since only an exercise of legislative power can accomplish that result.¹⁶ An amendment of a statute so as to make it inapplicable to grants to the state, directly or by mesne conveyance, provides for a transfer of title and not merely for a change in procedure, and therefore must be construed as prospective only.¹⁷

A conveyance of land while it is in litigation may be champertous under statute, but not otherwise when bona fide.

By virtue of statute, the taking of a conveyance of land may be prohibited when the land is in litigation, the grantor is out of possession, and the grantee has knowledge of the pendency of the suit and the grantor's lack of possession.¹⁸ In the absence of statute, a bona fide conveyance of land in dispute made by plaintiff after the commencement of the suit is not void for champerty or maintenance.¹⁹

§ 34. — Validity or Invalidity of Title of Grantor or Adverse Claimant

The champertous character of a conveyance does not turn on the validity or invalidity of the title of the grantor or of the occupant.

The validity or the invalidity of the title of the grantor or of the person in possession is immaterial.²⁰ The possession of the vendor is the fact on which the question of a violation of the rule turns.²¹

§ 35. Other Champertous Transactions

The solicitation of claims by or for an attorney, the furnishing of attorneys by a layman, the division of an attorney's fee with a layman, and other transactions wherein a person interferes officiously for the purpose of increasing or continuing litigation may be within the condemnation of the principles of champerty or maintenance or statutes specifically dealing therewith.

Any contract which in its nature tends to increase litigation, multiply contentions, unsettle the peace and quiet of a community, set one neighbor against another, give one litigant an advantage over another, or induce witnesses or parties to resort to perjury or subornation of perjury or to the commission of any other crime or offense against the laws of the commonwealth, is champertous and against public policy.²² Conversely, a contract or agreement will not be within the condemnation of the principles of champerty or maintenance unless the interference by the person charged therewith is clearly officious and for the purpose of stirring up strife or continuing litigation.²³

Soliciting legal business or furnishing attorneys. While a statute prohibiting attorneys from personally soliciting claims, or certain classes of claims, for the purpose of collection or bringing suit thereon, or forbidding laymen to solicit employment for attorneys or engage in the business of furnishing attorneys or counsel to render legal services, is a valid police regulation not violative of any constitutional restriction,²⁴ and, when applicable, will be accorded effect;²⁵ it is not retroactive,²⁶ and, being penal in nature, will be strictly construed.²⁷ The solicitation of employment as constituting barratry is considered in the C.J.S. title Barratry § 2 a.

Division of fee. An attorney may not properly assign an interest in his fee to, or agree to divide the fee with, another person, unless such other person is an attorney,²⁸ or the fee is for services of a nonlegal character.²⁹

III. OPERATION AND EFFECT AND OBJECTIONS

§ 36. Prohibited Contracts in General

Regardless of its form, an agreement which is champertous in fact is void.

It is generally considered that a champertous contract or agreement is void.³⁰ There is authority to the effect that the purchase of a litigious right in

Reduction of litigation

A corporation, organized for the purpose of conducting an exchange or clearing house whereby milk bottles coming into the possession of persons not the owners might be recovered, collected, and forwarded to the dealers whose names or labels appeared thereon, was not guilty of champerty or maintenance in bringing replevin against a junk dealer to recover such bottles in his possession, as such suit, instead of fostering litigation, tended to reduce lawsuits, and its objective, the recovery of lost or stolen property, was lawful.—*Milk Dealers' Bottle Exch. v. violation of a statute is a nullity;³¹ but the nullity is relative in the sense that only one whose right is violated can invoke it;³² and the view has been taken that, even if an assignment is champertous, the trustee in a deed from the assignor which is subsequent to, and independent of, the assignment and which recognizes the obligation, is in no position to raise the question of champerty.³³

Where, by reason of its consideration or the matters contemplated by it, an agreement is in fact champertous, the courts will not allow its effect as a champertous agreement to be defeated by the form of contract adopted.³⁴ Whether an invalid provision against settlement by a client without the consent of his attorney vitiates the entire contract between attorney and client or may be rejected and the remainder of the contract preserved is discussed supra § 15.

The conflict of authority as to the effect of the interest of plaintiff's attorney in the suit, by reason of a contract for a contingent fee or otherwise, on the right or privilege of plaintiff to sue in forma pauperis is discussed in the C.J.S. title Costs § 148, also 15 C.J. p 234 notes 82-86.

Stare decisis

The rule that the claim or counterclaim of a party to an action must be dismissed, where it appears that such party has a champertous agreement with his attorney or some third person, has been so long recognized in the state that it will not be overruled, although it is contrary to the weight of authority in other jurisdictions.—Blixt v. Janowiak, supra.

Rescission of champertous agreement during trial

Where it appeared at the trial that plaintiffs had a champertous agreement with their attorneys made in another state, where such agreement did not bar recovery against defendants, but that their local attorneys had no knowledge thereof, it was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion to permit the rescission by the parties of that champertous agreement and the substitution therefor of a proper agreement without dismissing the action, the only effect of which would have been to cause delay incident to commencing a new action.—Blixt v. Janowiak, supra.

38. U.S.—New York Phonograph Co. v. National Phonograph Co., C.C. N.Y., 119 F. 544.

The parties to a champertous contract may rescind it, reconvey property transferred thereunder or thereby, and thus place matters in the same position as before the contract was entered into,³⁵ or they may cancel the contract and enter into a new and valid contract.³⁶ As stated infra § 47, the parties to the contract have no cause of action thereon, but, for services rendered, there may be a recovery on quantum meruit.

§ 38. — As to Defendant

Subject to statutory provisions stating the rights of defendant, a suit will be dismissed because of champerty only when the champerty is in an assignment or other agreement which is the basis of plaintiff's claim and is directly involved in the action, and not when the champerty is in a collateral agreement between plaintiff and his attorney or plaintiff and another layman.

Although a contrary view has been taken,³⁷ the rule is well settled that the fact that there is a champertous contract in relation to the prosecution of the suit between plaintiff and his attorney, or between plaintiff and another layman, in no wise affects the obligation of defendant to plaintiff; it is the champertous contract and not the right of action itself which the contract avoids, and, therefore, defendant cannot avail himself of the champertous agreement as a defense to the action.³⁸ However, where a champertous assignment, purchase, or agreement is not collateral to the claim sued on, but is the basis or foundation of plaintiff's suit, a judgment of dismissal or nonsuit should be rendered, even though defendant is a stranger to the champertous contract.³⁹

Plaintiff will not be permitted, by a claim of champerty, to defeat a meritorious defense, such as payment.⁴⁰ Where, by stipulation in a note and mortgage, the debtor is to pay the fee of the attorney for the creditor, but the creditor and the attorney enter into a champertous agreement to split the fee, any money exacted from the debtor under this arrangement in excess of what the attorney actually receives is the property of the debtor and is recoverable by him as for money had and received.⁴¹

A code provision that a party against whom a litigious right has been transferred may be released from liability by paying to the transferee the real price of the transaction, together with interest from its date, may, when applicable, be taken advantage of;⁴² but it refers to conventional sales and not to judicial sales⁴³ or gratuitous transfers.⁴⁴

The provisions of the statute can be invoked only by the party to the suit against whom the right is to be exercised. The vendor of a litigious right has no standing to complain of the transfer.⁴⁵ However, the statutory provisions are not limited to the protection of defendant, but are available to plaintiff where he is the party against whom a litigious right has been transferred.⁴⁶ It seems that where both of the present parties to an action are assignees of the original litigants and each acquired an alleged litigious right, neither can claim the privilege provided by the statute.⁴⁷

To be effective, an election to exercise the option conferred by the statute must be made in due time and without unnecessary delay;⁴⁸ it can be made only during the continuation of the litigation;⁴⁹ but just how far short of final judgment one may go before seeking to avail himself of the provisions of the statute depends largely on the facts of the case.⁵⁰

§ 39. Conveyances of Land Held Adversely

The authorities differ as to whether a champertous conveyance is wholly void or void only as to the person in possession.

According to some authorities, a champertous conveyance of land held adversely by a third person at the time of the conveyance is void⁵¹ absolutely⁵² and for all purposes,⁵³ and even against strangers,⁵⁴ notwithstanding the sale is fair and bona fide.⁵⁵ Where part of the land included in a deed is possessed adversely and the deed is champertous to that extent, it is void pro tanto;⁵⁶ but according to other authorities the conveyance, although void and inoperative, as indicated infra § 40, as to the person in possession and his privies, is valid as to all other persons,⁵⁷ including, as stated infra § 41, the parties to the deed. A conveyance of land adversely possessed by a third person is, of course, not void for champerty in a state where, at the time of the conveyance, the common law relating to champertous conveyances does not obtain and there is no statute making the conveyance champertous.⁵⁸ Also, where there is no adverse possession by a third person, there is, as stated supra § 31 a, e, no champerty in the conveyance, and obviously the deed is not invalid because of champerty.⁵⁹ Again, although the grantor has been ousted, if the grantee was entitled to the conveyance under a prior contract with the grantor, the deed is valid.⁶⁰

§ 40. — As to Person in Possession

A champertous conveyance is void as to the person in adverse possession and his privies.

In all jurisdictions wherein, under the law in force at the time, a conveyance of lands held adversely by a third person is champertous, it is void as to the person in possession and his privies,⁶¹

even though the conveyance is made in good faith and for a valuable consideration.⁶² As against the person in adverse possession, no right or title is passed or transmitted from the grantor to the grantee by the deed; title remains in the grantor,⁶³ and may be subsequently purchased from him by the adverse possessor⁶⁴ during the pendency of a suit against such possessor by the grantor for the benefit of the champertous grantee.⁶⁵ However, a champertous deed is void as to the disseisor only by reason of his actual seisin, and his holding adversely to the title of the grantor; the disseisor will be permitted to dispute the true title only so long as his disseisin continues; if he abandons his former possession, such abandonment will inure to the grantee and give the latter seisin; and if the grantee peaceably, lawfully, and without fraud or force, or the display thereof, enters under the deed and obtains possession of the land, even against the wishes of the disseisor, the grantee may avail himself of the title of the grantor obtained through the deed and by uniting that title with his own possession thus acquired may thereby complete in himself a title which will be good as against the former disseisor who is without title and is now out of possession.⁶⁶

The person in possession may waive the effect of champerty in a deed;⁶⁷ and where, at the time of the sale, he disclaims any interest in the property, he is estopped to question the deed.⁶⁸

whether a champertous conveyance is operative or inoperative between the parties thereto.

As between the grantor and the grantee and persons standing in legal privity with them, a champertous conveyance is, according to some authorities, valid and operative to pass title,⁶⁹ it being good at least by way of estoppel;⁷⁰ and, as a consequence of this doctrine, if the grantee buys in the adverse title, a purchaser from him cannot complain of the title.⁷¹ According to other authorities, however, a champertous conveyance has been held or stated to be of no effect between the parties and does not pass title to the grantee.⁷²

Rescission. As champertous conveyances are often made in the best of faith and the purchaser pays a valuable consideration therefor, it is just and proper that the parties should be allowed to rescind and put themselves in statu quo.⁷³

§ 42. — Acquisition of Title after Enactment of Permissive Statute

After the enactment of a statute permitting a conveyance despite adverse possession, a grantee in a prior void deed may acquire a valid title.

A title acquired by the grantee in a conveyance which was void by reason of an adverse possession, after the enactment of a statute permitting such conveyances, is valid.⁷⁴

§ 44. — Prohibited Contracts Generally

The authorities differ on the question whether an objection or defense that the contract sued on is champertous must, to be available, be pleaded.

In some jurisdictions an objection or defense that the contract sued on is champertous need not be pleaded,⁷⁵ but may be considered by the court of its own motion,⁷⁶ or on a suggestion first made during the reception of evidence at the trial.⁷⁷ In other jurisdictions the defense must be pleaded;⁷⁸ it cannot be introduced under the general issue, unless notice of such defense has been filed with the plea.⁷⁹ As stated in the C.J.S. title Pleading § 529, also 49 C.J. p 802 note 60, it is not available under a general denial; and it cannot be raised after judgment, as in a suit in equity to subject effects of defendant to the judgment.⁸⁰

§ 45. — Conveyances of Land Held Adversely

In some states the defense of champerty in a conveyance must be specially pleaded; but under the statutes of other states it may be proved under the general issue.

It has been held that in an action to recover possession of land, the defense that the conveyance to plaintiff was void for champerty must be especially pleaded and is waived by failure to set it up;⁸¹ but in some states, by virtue of express statutory provisions, champerty in a conveyance may be proved and relied on under the general issue, without being expressly or specially pleaded, in an action to recover the title or possession of land adversely held.⁸² A party may not at the same time assert that a deed is in trust and that it is champertous.⁸³

IV. REMEDIES

§ 46. Prohibited Contracts in General

See infra §§ 47–49. Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 47. — Right of Action

The courts will not aid either party to a champertous contract by enforcing or canceling the contract or by compelling a restoration of property parted with or money paid out under the agreement; but reasonable compensation for services rendered may be recovered on quantum meruit in the same manner as if the champertous agreement had never existed; and at common law maintenance may be redressed by an action for damages.

A champertous agreement cannot form the basis of a cause of action between the parties thereto;⁸⁴ the courts will not enforce⁸⁵ or cancel⁸⁶ the agreement, or supervise the division of profits thereunder;⁸⁷ and, according to the weight of authority, they will not compel the restoration of property parted with or money paid out under the agreement.⁸⁸ In some cases, however, involving champertous contracts between attorney and client, the attorney has been compelled to refund all the money collected under the agreement, less the necessary costs which he has expended;⁸⁹ and there may be circumstances apart from the champerty which entitle a client to equitable relief against the attorney with whom she entered into the champertous agreement, as where the client was ignorant and illiterate and the attorney was her brother-in-law and she looked to him for advice and guidance.⁹⁰

On the other hand, while a contrary doctrine is maintained by some decisions,⁹¹ according to the weight of authority, where an agreement between attorney and client is void for champerty, but the agreement and the services of the attorney are not otherwise illegal, the attorney may recover on quantum meruit fair and reasonable compensation for services rendered by him, in the same manner as if the champertous agreement had never existed.⁹² It has further been held that, if the client is insolvent and a suit at law would be fruitless, equity will take jurisdiction and decree compensation out of the property recovered.⁹³ In estimating the attorney's recovery, the jury should not take into consideration the compensation agreed on⁹⁴ further than to limit it to that amount,⁹⁵ the illegal agreement constituting no criterion as to the amount of the recovery.⁹⁶ Where a contract of retainer is rescinded as champertous at the instance of the client, and a reasonable fee is fixed by the court, the attorney cannot be required to perform additional services without further charge.⁹⁷

As stated supra § 38, a champertous contract does not prevent the maintenance of a suit against a stranger to the contract unless the suit is founded on the contract.

An action will lie at common law to recover damages for maintenance.⁹⁸

§ 48. — Pleading and Evidence

To allege champerty or maintenance adequately and effectively, a pleading must show the elements thereof and its connection with the suit or the claim sued on. Champerty will not be presumed, but must be proved by competent and cogent evidence.

In an action for maintenance it is necessary to allege in the declaration or complaint the pendency of a suit, and to specify the court in which it is pending, together with time, place, and circumstances, so as to show the maintenance.⁹⁹

A particular petition may be so worded as not to show on its face that plaintiff has been willfully guilty of any act or combination of acts denounced by statute as barratry.¹

The necessity of pleading champerty as a defense is discussed supra § 44. A plea of champerty is insufficient where it does not clearly show that the champertous agreement is the basis of plaintiff's claim.²

The burden of proving champerty, when it is interposed as a defense, is on defendant.³ Where defendant claims that the transaction is within a statutory prohibition, he has the burden of showing that the case is within the statute,⁴ and plaintiff has the burden of showing that the case is within a statutory exception.⁵ A contract will be presumed to be lawful, rather than champertous.⁶ Also, champerty will not be inferred without strong proof.⁷ The admissibility of evidence is governed by the rules relating to civil actions in general.⁸

§ 49. — Questions of Law and Fact and Instructions

Questions of fact should be determined as such, under proper instructions, and not as matters of law.

Where champerty is interposed as a defense, or as ground for dismissal of the action, questions of fact, such as the question of good faith, should be determined by the trier of facts;⁹ and, if the action is tried before a jury, proper instructions relating to the defense may be given.¹⁰ A contract will not be held champertous as a matter of law where, on its face, it does not indicate champerty and there is testimony which, if accepted as true, shows that there is no champerty or anything akin thereto in the contract.¹¹

Remedies between the parties to a champertous conveyance are considered in the next two sections.

§ 52. — Action on Covenants

No action is maintainable on the covenants in a champertous and void conveyance.

A grantee in a conveyance which is champertous and void has no right of action on the covenants contained therein.¹²

§ 53. — Equitable Remedies

Subject to certain limitations, equitable remedies are sometimes allowed between the parties to champertous conveyances.

Although there are cases holding the contrary,¹³ a rescission of a conveyance or of a contract to convey will be decreed in chancery, where it is void for champerty and maintenance, although the parties are in pari delicto; adverse possession alone is sufficient cause for rescission.¹⁴ Similarly, restoration may be compelled where, after a decree rescinding a contract, the vendee surrenders to the vendor, which decree is subsequently reversed and the original contract confirmed.¹⁵ Also, according to some authorities, a grantee in a champertous tiff in a personal injury suit to pay for the services of a physician is not relevant to the issue as to whether or not the contract with his attorney was champertous.—Beckles v. Boston El. R. Co., 101 N.E. 145, 214 Mass. 311.

deed, who, at the time he took the deed, had no knowledge of the adverse possession, may, in equity, maintain a suit against the grantor for recovery of the purchase price;¹⁶ but he may do so only within the period of time prescribed by the statute of limitations;¹⁷ and, unless induced by fraudulent representation or concealment, his ignorance of the adverse possession does not prevent the running of the statute.¹⁸ According to other authorities, a court of equity will not interfere either to compel the vendor to refund the purchase money, or to enjoin him from prosecuting his action for it against the vendee, but will leave the parties to their remedies, if any, at law,¹⁹ unless the vendor has made fraudulent representations in regard to the property at the time of sale.²⁰

An action to foreclose a mortgage which was given while the property mortgaged was held adversely by a third person cannot be maintained until the mortgagor has actually recovered possession.²¹

§ 54. — As against Occupant in General

The party to a champertous deed who has the title and right of entry requisite to the maintenance of an action of ejectment against the adverse occupant is the grantor and not the grantee; but in most jurisdictions the grantor may sue for the benefit of the grantee.

On performance of such conditions precedent as may obtain in the particular state, such as the abandonment or rescission of the champertous contract,²² the grantor in a champertous conveyance may maintain in his own name an action of ejectment or other action to recover possession of the land from the adverse occupant.²³ This he may do in his own behalf;²⁴ or, in most jurisdictions, for the benefit of the grantee;²⁵ but where the conveyance is deemed void as between the parties, as well as against the person in adverse possession, no action lies for the benefit of the grantee.²⁶ On the other hand, an action to recover possession from the person holding it adversely may not be brought in the name of the grantee alone;²⁷ and in some states it may be brought only in the name of the grantor and not in the name of the grantee;²⁸ but under the jurisprudence of other states it may be brought in the names of both.²⁹

Unless the grantee is authorized by a statute in force at the time to sue in the name of the grantor as a matter of course and without obtaining the consent of the grantor,³⁰ the permission of the grantor is requisite to the bringing of a suit by the grantee in the name of the grantor and he cannot be compelled by the grantee to grant such permission or bring suit himself.³¹

§ 55. — Defenses

The defenses available may vary in different classes of actions between different parties.

It is no defense to an action for the recovery of land adversely held that plaintiff has previously made a champertous conveyance of it; such an unlawful conveyance is only a defense where it is itself the foundation of the action;³² but, under a tatute providing that an action of ejectment may be brought in the name of the real owner to recover the title to, or possession of, the land, even though plaintiff may have obtained his title by a conveyance from a grantor not in possession where, pending an action of ejectment, plaintiff executes a conveyance of the land in controversy, defendant may avail himself of such fact in defense of the action.³³

In an action by two plaintiffs to establish joint ownership with defendants, the fact that the deed held by one plaintiff is champertous is not a defense against the claim of the other plaintiff whose title, if any, was inherited.³⁴

The grantee may set up, as against the grantor suing for the purchase price, that the deed does not pass title.³⁵

§ 56. — Rights of Occupant in General

The fact of champerty does not authorize a person in adverse possession to sue in equity to avoid a deed or, after he has lost possession, to bring an action of ejectment.

The person in possession of land cannot sustain a bill in equity for the avoidance of a deed executed to another by a person claiming adversely to the tenant, on the ground that the deed is void in consequence of his adverse possession.³⁶ Also, although there may have been champerty, a former occupant without title may not, after he has lost possession in a lawful manner, bring an action of ejectment against the person in possession.³⁷

§ 57. — Action for Penalty

A statutory penalty for selling or purchasing a pretended title is not recoverable from a person who sold or purchased land without knowledge of adverse possession thereof.

A person who sells or purchases land without knowledge that there is a subsisting adverse possession is not liable to a statutory penalty for selling or purchasing a pretended title.³⁸

§ 58. — Rights of Third Persons

Champerty in a conveyance or contract cannot be complained of by third persons without title, interest, or possession.

Third persons who have neither title to, nor possession of, the property involved and no interest in a champertous transaction, cannot be heard to object to a conveyance or contract on the ground that it is tainted with champerty.³⁹

§ 59. — Pleading and Evidence

The party who relies on champerty to defeat a deed has the burden of proving it by clear and convincing evidence. The invalidity of the conveyance need not be pleaded by the grantor in an action by him against the adverse occupant.

An action against a person in adverse possession may be brought by the grantor in a champertous conveyance without pleading the invalidity of the conveyance.⁴⁰ When it has been apprehended that a deed might be attacked on the ground of an adverse holding at the time it was made, not infrequently counts on the title of the grantor and of the grantee have been inserted in the declaration, so that if the suit should fail as to the one it might succeed as to the other.⁴¹ Whether the adverse occupant, in an action against him by the grantee, must plead champerty specially, in order to take advantage of it, is discussed in § 45 supra.

Ordinarily, the burden of proving that a deed in claimant's chain of title is void for champerty, on the ground that it was executed by the grantor when the land was adversely held, is on him who relies on such fact;⁴² every presumption is in favor of a possession in subordination to the title of the true owner.⁴³ In the absence of evidence of knowledge of a pending suit affecting the property on the part of the vendee or of a record of his conviction for violating a statute making it an offense to take a conveyance from a person not in possession while the land is the subject of controversy by suit, the presumption is that he had no such knowledge,⁴⁴ but, on the other hand, it will be presumed that the seller of land knew whether or not a third person was in adverse possession of it, and the burden is on him to prove the contrary.⁴⁵ A party who, to defeat a plea of champerty in a deed, claims that the deed, although executed during adverse possession, was executed in pursuance of a contract to convey, entered into prior to adverse possession, has the burden of showing the prior contract or satisfactorily accounting for its loss.⁴⁶

The facts necessary to render a conveyance champertous must be established by clear and convincing evidence.⁴⁷

V. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY

61. Offenses

Not only is champerty a common-law offense, but champerty or maintenance or some particular form thereof is a statutory offense in some jurisdictions.

Champerty is an offense at common law;⁵⁵ and champerty or maintenance or some particular form thereof is an offense when it is within the application of a criminal statute of the jurisdiction where it is committed;⁵⁶ but, of course, a statute defining the crime of champerty must be applicable before a person may properly be found guilty of a violation thereof.⁵⁷

The gist of the offense, whether champerty or maintenance, is an officious intermeddling in a suit which in no way belongs to the intermeddler.⁵⁸

§ 62. Prosecution and Punishment

To convict under a statute, a case within the statute must be alleged in the indictment or information and established by the evidence.

In a prosecution for a statutory offense, it is necessary for the state to allege⁵⁹ and prove a case within the application of the statute; and where the evidence is wholly insufficient, defendant's demurrer to the evidence or motion to direct a verdict in his favor should be sustained.⁶⁰ A criminal intent will not be presumed.⁶¹

CHAMPION. A combatant, a fighter; or one who engages in any contest; especially in ancient times, one who contended in single combat in behalf of another's honor, or rights, or sometimes, of his own; now one who acts or speaks in behalf of a person, or a cause; a defender or an advocate.¹

Champion of the king or queen. An ancient officer, whose duty it was to ride armed cap-a-pie, into Westminster Hall at the coronation, while the king was at dinner, and, by the proclamation of a herald, make a challenge "that, if any man shall deny the king's title to the crown, he is there ready to defend it in single combat." The king drank to him, and sent him a gilt cup covered, full of wine, which the champion drank, retaining the cup as his fee.²

Another phrase: "Self-constituted champion of the red light."³

CHANCE.

As a Noun

It has been said that strictly or philosophically there is no such thing as chance;⁴ but the word is commonly understood to imply an absence of explainable or controllable causation,⁵ or a lack of knowledge;⁶ and, while it has not been adopted or defined as a law term, is not technical, and must be deemed used in a popular sense,⁷ it has never-

Self-defense distinguished

It has been said that, strictly speaking, "chance-medley" is the killing of a man in a casual affray in self-defense, while "chaud-medley" is a homicide committed in the heat of an affray and while under the influence of passion; and so the two terms have been mutually distinguished, although it has also been said that the distinction is of no great importance.—Black L.D.

rope, and is generally invested with extensive political authority.²⁴

In England, besides being the designation of the chief judge of the court of chancery, the term is used as the title of several judicial officers attached to bishops or other dignitaries and to the universities.²⁵

In Scotch practice, the foreman of an assize or jury.²⁶

Chancellor of a cathedral. In English ecclesiastical law, one of the "quatuor personæ," or four chief dignitaries of the cathedrals of the old foundation. The duties assigned to the office by the statutes of the different chapters vary, but they are chiefly of an educational character, with a special reference to the cultivation of theology.²⁷

Chancellor of a university. As a governing officer of a university, see C.J.S. title Colleges and universities § 16, also 11 C.J. p 285 note 43.

In English law, the official head of a university.²⁸

Chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. An officer who presides over the court of the duchy to judge and determine controversies relating to lands held of the king in right of the duchy of Lancaster.²⁹

Chancellor of the exchequer. In England, an officer who formerly sat in the court of exchequer and, with the rest of the court, ordered things for the king's benefit.³⁰

Chancellor of the order of the garter. An officer who seals the commissions and the mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their proceedings, and delivers their acts

under the seal of their order.³¹

Chancellor's courts in the two universities. In English law, courts of local jurisdiction, resembling borough courts, in and for the two universities of Oxford and Cambridge in England.³²

Lord high chancellor. In England, the lord high chancellor is the highest judicial officer of the realm, and in point of precedency ranks above every temporal lord; he is also keeper of the great seal, a privy counsellor, and prolocutor of the house of lords.³³

Vice chancellor. In English law, a judge of the court of chancery, acting as assistant to the lord chancellor, and holding a separate court, from whose judgment an appeal lay to the chancellor.³⁴

CHANCER. To adjust according to the principles of equity, as would be done by a court of chancery.³⁵

As to the power of a bankruptcy court to chancer a bond see C.J.S. title Bankruptcy § 20, also 7 C.J. p 26 note 51 [b].

CHANCERY. A court formerly existing in England and still existing in several of the United States which possesses an extensive equity jurisdiction.³⁶ As a system of equitable jurisprudence see the C.J.S. title Equity § 1, also 21 C.J. p 22 note 1—p 31 note 66.

Chancery jurisdiction. As the judicial power to hear and determine all cases wherein the law by reason of its universality cannot afford relief, see the C.J.S. title Equity § 7 et seq., also 21 C.J. p 31 et seq.

description and history of office

He is appointed by the delivery of the king's great seal into his custody. He may not be a Roman Catholic. He is a cabinet minister, privy counsellor, and prolocutor of the house of lords by prescription, but not necessarily, although usually, a peer of the realm, and vacates his office with the ministry by which he was appointed. To him belongs the appointment of all justices of the peace throughout the kingdom. Being, in the earlier periods of English history, usually an ecclesiastic, (for none else were then capable of an office so conversant in writings), and presiding over the royal chapel, he became keeper of the king's conscience, visitor, in right of the crown, of the hospitals and colleges of royal foundation, and patron of all the crown livings under the value of twenty marks per annum in the king's books. He is the general guardian of all infants, idiots, and lunatics, and has the general superintendence of all charitable uses, and all this, over and above the vast and extensive jurisdiction which he exercises in his judicial capacity in the supreme court of judicature, of which he is the head.—Black L.D.

has been defined as meaning to alter or make different, to exchange, to put one thing in the place of another, or to render something essentially different from what it was, even to loss of identity or the substitution of one thing for another.⁹² Intransitively, to come to pass from one state or place to another.⁹³

In particular connections, and always taking into account the context and circumstances of its use, "change" has been held to be equivalent to, or interchangeable or synonymous with, "alter," see Alter 3 C.J.S. p 898 note 87, and "vacate,"⁹⁴ has been held to be broader than, and hence distinguished from, "alter," "amend," and "modify,"⁹⁵ and has also been distinguished from "establish."⁹⁶

Phrases: "Change, amend, or extend the charter,"⁹⁷ "change his occupation,"⁹⁸ "change its scope or object,"⁹⁹ "change the venue,"¹ and "modify, amend, alter, or change,"² also "changes its course,"³ and also "changing the grade of the sidewalk."⁴

—Changed. The past tense or past participle of the verb "change" which, it has been said, implies active design, deliberate action, rather than unconscious alteration due to forgetfulness.⁵

Phrases: "Changed condition [or conditions],"⁶

"changed his occupation,"⁷ "changed" his testimony,"⁸ "changed occupation,"⁹ "repealed, altered, or changed,"¹⁰ and "until 'thereafter changed.'"¹¹

CHANGER. An officer formerly belonging to the king's mint, in England, whose business was chiefly to exchange coin for bullion brought in by merchants and others.¹²

CHANNEL. It has been said that the word is a generic term applicable to any watercourse, whether a river, creek, slough, or canal;¹³ and that its precise meaning depends upon the context in which it is used,¹⁴ two lines of definitions being generally recognized, the one, employed in boatmen's parlance, as meaning the course where the water is deepest and the navigation safest; the other, in geographical usage, designating the depression of a bed, below permanent banks, wherein waters flow and which may be sometimes full and sometimes not.¹⁵ With reference to matters of navigation see the C.J.S. titles Collision § 2, Navigable Waters § 20, also 11 C.J. p 287 notes 68-77; and as applied to watercourses of a nonnavigable character see the C.J.S. title Waters § 41, also 11 C.J. p 287 note 78- p 288 note 88.

As an Adjective

Channel bars. Vertical iron bars extending from floor to the ceiling of a building in front of an elevator shaft, designed to hold the fire bricks making the final wall of the shaft.²⁰

CANTER. The chief singer in the choir of a cathedral.²¹

CHANCERY. A church or chapel endowed with lands for the maintenance of priests to say mass daily for the souls of the donors.²²

CHAPEL. A small church.²³

CHAPELRY. The precinct and limits of a chapel; same thing to a chapel as a parish is to a church.²⁴

CHAPERON. A hood or bonnet, anciently worn by the Knights of the Garter, as part of the habit of that order; also a little escutcheon fixed in the forehead of horses drawing a hearse at a funeral.²⁵

CHAPITRE. A summary of matters to be inquired of or presented before justices in eyre, justices of the peace, or of the peace, in their sessions; also articles delivered by the justice in his charge to the next.²⁶

CHAPLAIN. An ecclesiastic who performs divine service in a chapel; but it more commonly means one who attends upon a king, prince, or other person of quality, for the performance of clerical duties in a private chapel. In more modern application, a clergyman officially attached to a ship of war, to an army, or regiment, or to some public institution, for the purpose of performing divine service.²⁷

CHAPLET. As employed in the phrase "rosaries, chaplets, and similar articles of religious devotion," "chaplets" was held not to include crucifixes.²⁸

CHAPMAN. An itinerant vendor of small wares.²⁹

Petty chapman. A word analogous to, and sometimes defined in the same terms as, a hawk or peddler, being a person traveling from town to town with goods and merchandise for sale.³⁰

CHAPTER. In ecclesiastical law, a congregation of ecclesiastical persons in a cathedral church, consisting of canons, or prebendaries, whereof the dean is the head, all subordinate to the bishop, to whom they act as assistants in matters relating to the church, for the better ordering and disposing of the things thereof, and the confirmation of such leases of the temporality and offices relating to the bishopric, as the bishop shall make from time to time.³¹

CHAR. To reduce wood to a coal by burning.³² The term has been distinguished from "to scorch or discolor by heat."³³

CHARACTER.

Personal Attributes

—In General. In what may be called its abstract, primary sense, the word has been defined as meaning the aggregate of the moral qualities which belong to and distinguish an individual person, the chapels owned by private persons, used by themselves and their families, are called "private," as opposed to chapels of ease, which are built for the accommodation of particular districts within a parish, in ease of the original parish church.—Black L.D., citing 2 Stephen Comm. p 745.

Private chapels

Proprietary chapels

In English law, those belonging to private persons who have purchased or erected them with a view to profit or otherwise.—Black L.D.

Public chapels or chapels of ease

In English law, chapels founded at some period later than the church itself. They were designed for the accommodation of such of the parishioners as in course of time had begun to fix their residence at a distance from its site; and chapels so circumstanced were also described as "chapels of ease," because built in aid, or ease, of the original

general result of one's distinguishing attributes,³⁴ the peculiar qualities impressed by nature or habit on a person which distinguish him from others,³⁵ the principles and motives that control the life, or the stamp impressed by nature, education, and habit;³⁶ and, more specifically, as disposition, independence, individuality, moral quality, resolution, or strength of mind;³⁷ also as meaning morality³⁸ or personal virtue.³⁹ The word is also used to designate a statement or testimonial given to a servant, on the termination of his employment, showing the character of work performed while in the service.⁴⁰ It has been said that "character" is distinguished from "disposition;"⁴¹ and is seldom used as synonymous with "mere inclination" or "propensity," or even "secret habit."⁴²

—In Jurisprudence. It has been said that in legal parlance, the term "character" has a dual meaning. It may refer to a person's private life, about which the public may have no knowledge, or it may mean the character a person enjoys by reputation;⁴³ and whether it will be given one or the other meaning will, of course, depend on the circumstances of its use in the particular case, for context and intent must generally be resorted to in the interpretation.⁴⁴ In particular connections, or for some purposes, as where it is sought to show what a person's character is with especial reference to a specific trait, it has been said that the text writers and the adjudged cases generally speak of "conduct" and "character" as convertible terms, and that such language is accurate enough for all practical purposes;⁴⁵ and hence "character," in the sense in which the term is used in jurisprudence, or when properly made the subject of inquiry in courts of justice, is frequently employed as referring to one's reputation in the neighborhood, or common report;⁴⁶ and has been defined as meaning the estimate attached to the individual by the community, not the real qualities of the individual as conceived by the witness. In other words it is not what the individual really is, but what he is held, or reputed, to be generally in the society and community in which he moves and resides, the estimate, individual or general, put upon a person, or the reputation, or the general credit which a man has obtained in public opinion, since the actual character of a person is not exactly ascertainable by any process of human inquiry; and so in such cases, "character" and "reputation" have been said to be equivalent, interchangeable, or even synonymous.⁴⁷ In other cases, however, it has been held that, strictly speaking, "character" and "reputation" are not synonymous but distinct, for a man may have a good character,

45. "Character" indicated by conduct

"If there be a metaphysical distinction between character and conduct, we know of no authority in law for admitting evidence of conduct where evidence of character would be excluded. Character or reputation is generally regarded as the voice of the community, but that is just what the conduct of the individual makes it. 'The speech of the people,' as it is most descriptively called, is suggested by the general tenor of the conduct, so that to prove the one is in effect to prove the other; and the rule of law that would exclude character excludes conduct. . . . But where any distinction is taken it is for the purpose of saying that the evidence must relate to reputation and not conduct."—Zitzer v. Merkel, 24 Pa. 408, 410.

et have a bad reputation, or vice versa; and their use as synonyms is inaccurate or, at least, careless, in that such use fails to recognize that "character," strictly speaking, means that which a person is really, while "reputation" means what a person is estimated, said, supposed, or thought, to be by others.⁴⁸ Character is internal, reputation external; one is the substance and the other the shadow.⁴⁹ "Character" signifies the reality, and "reputation" merely what is reputed or understood from report to be the reality about a person or thing.⁵⁰ "Character" means what a man is morally, and consists of the qualities which constitute the individual, including natural and acquired tastes; and these have been held to constitute one's actual, or real, character.⁵¹ Reputation, the qualities one is supposed to possess, may be termed one's estimated, or reputed, character in contradistinction to his real character.⁵²

Chaste character. It has been said that the term is not limited alone to unlawful sexual intercourse, but means purity of mind and innocence of heart;⁵³ actual personal virtue, not merely reputation or good name.⁵⁴

Good moral character. The words are general in their application but they include all the elements essential to make up such a character; among these are common honesty and veracity, especially in all professional intercourse,⁵⁵ although it has been held that the highest degree of moral excellence is not required;⁵⁶ and the term has been defined as meaning a character that measures up as good among the people of the community in which the person lives, or that is up to the standard of the average citizen;⁵⁷ that status which attaches to a man of good behavior and upright conduct.⁵⁸

As one of the qualities required of an applicant for admission to a particular status see the C.J.S. titles Aliens § 127, Attorney and Client § 7 b, and Intoxicating Liquors § 135, also 33 C.J. p 541 notes 9-13.

Reputed character. The slow-spreading influence of opinion, arising out of the deportment of an individual in the society in which he moves,⁵⁹ the equivalent of "reputation;"⁶⁰ and distinguished from "real character."⁶¹

its legal acceptance, it has a very broad meaning;⁹² and that its meaning must be determined by the associations and circumstances surrounding use.⁹³

It has been defined in general as meaning a burden, load, or weight;⁹⁴ any burden or exactness;⁹⁵ any onerous condition;⁹⁶ that which is laid on, or which can be borne or taken by, a person or thing;⁹⁷ hence, derivatively, duty, obligation, office, oversight, responsibility, or trust;⁹⁸ and, more specifically, a burden, duty, obligation, or task laid imposed upon a person or thing;⁹⁹ an obligation directly bearing upon the individual person or thing to be affected, and appointing, or binding, him to the discharge of the duty or satisfaction of a claim imposed;¹ an obligation imposed on a person or estate;² a responsibility peculiar to the person or thing affected and authoritatively imposed;³ special assessment on land;⁴ also a lien, encumbrance, or claim which is to be satisfied out of the specific thing or proceeds thereof to which it applies.⁵

In another sense, custody or care of any person, place, or thing, although not necessarily including custody, control, or restraint;⁶ also an undertaking to keep the custody of another person's goods.⁷

In what may be deemed a commercial sense, the price required or demanded for service rendered, or (less usually) for goods supplied;⁸ and while, in its strict use in bookkeeping parlance, the word may be defined as meaning a transaction involving, or a bookkeeping entry belonging to, but one side of an account, it has been held that, in a particular connection, it is not to be thus narrowly construed as referring exclusively to a credit transaction, but that it must be given its primary meaning of the creation of or recognition of an obligation, and may thus be applied or may refer to a cash transaction.⁹

As defined by the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and as understood by electrical technicians, the word "charge" signifies the conversion of electrical energy into chemical energy within a cell or storage battery.¹⁰

In Scotch law, the command of the king's letters to perform some act, as a charge to enter heir; also a messenger's execution, requiring a person to obey the order of the king's letters, as a charge on letters of horning, or a charge against a superior.¹¹

In particular connections or contexts, and applying the various definitions above indicated for the word, "charge" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "accusation,"¹² "care,"¹³ "count,"¹⁴ "custody,"¹⁵ "indictment," "information," or "pre-

Charge and discharge. Under the former system of equity practice, this phrase was used to characterize the usual method of taking an account before a master. After the plaintiff had presented his "charge," a written statement of the items of account for which he asked credit, the defendant filed a counterstatement, called a "discharge," exhibiting any claims or demands he held against the plaintiff. These served to define the field of investigation, and constituted the basis of the report.²⁶

Public charge. In the sense of an expense, the term has been held to mean a money charge upon, or an expense to, the public for support and care; when used with reference to a person who has become a public charge, it has been held to mean one for whom support and care are actually provided at the expense of the public, and not one who is being cared for at the expense of his relatives.²⁷ The phrase has been also employed as meaning a person committed to the custody of a department of the government by due process of law.²⁸

land,"⁴⁷ "charge upon the effect of the evidence,"⁴⁸ "commission or charge,"⁴⁹ "date of the last charge,"⁵⁰ "in charge,"⁵¹ "lawful charge, control, or custody,"⁵² "likely to become a public charge," see Aliens §§ 92, 94 d, (10), "person in charge of defendant's ways, works, and machinery,"⁵³ "person in charge or control,"⁵⁴ "proper charge against the estate,"⁵⁵ "rate, fare, or charge,"⁵⁶ "reasonable charge,"⁵⁷ "rental charge,"⁵⁸ "retired in their 'charge,'"⁵⁹ "to have charge of,"⁶⁰ and "without charge to the county."⁶¹

—In the Plural. It has been said that the word "charges" has, from familiar use, the precision of a technical term;⁶² and it has been defined as meaning expenses⁶³ which have been incurred with relation either to a transaction or to a suit;⁶⁴ also liability;⁶⁵ and, more specifically, interest payable in respect of a mortgage.⁶⁶ In a different sense, an accusation made in a legal manner, of illegal conduct, either of omission or commission, by the person charged.⁶⁷

"Charges" as constituting an accusation upon which a criminal prosecution is based, see the C.J.S. title Criminal Law § 119, also 11 C.J. p 295 note 23; and as an accusation of official misconduct, see the C.J.S. titles Municipal Corporations § 514, also 43 C.J. p 668 notes 17-27, and Officers § 66, also 46 C.J. p 994 notes 30-38.

The word "charges" in a particular connection has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "conditions,"⁶⁸ and has been distinguished from "debts."⁶⁹

Phrases: "Administration charges,"⁷⁰ "charges against . . . estate,"⁷¹ "charges and credits,"⁷² "charges and expenses of the town,"⁷³ "charges forward,"⁷⁴ "charges of alleged facts,"⁷⁵ "charges or any part thereof,"⁷⁶ "debts and charges,"⁷⁷ "deemed to be charges thereon,"⁷⁸ "fees and charges,"⁷⁹

"reasonable charges of selling,"⁸⁰ "return charges,"⁸¹ "tolls, fees, rents, or charges,"⁸² and "under charges."⁸³

As a Verb

—Present Tense. To burden, to commission for a certain purpose, to intrust as a task or duty, or trust, and to lay on or impose as a load or burden,⁸⁴ or as a tax, duty, or trust;⁸⁵ to overload.⁸⁶ In another sense, to accuse, to ascribe the responsibility of, or to impute.⁸⁷ In yet another sense, to fix or demand a price for a thing or service,⁸⁸ hence to bill,⁸⁹ to demand or require;⁹⁰ but when used in connection with a sum of money it has been held to mean more than a mere demand which has not yet been acceded to or judicially enforced.⁹¹ In particular connections, "charge" has been held synonymous with "load,"⁹² has been compared with "accept,"⁹³ and has been distinguished from "mortgage."⁹⁴

Phrases: "Charge and accuse,"⁹⁵ "charge her separate estate," see C.J.S. title Husband and Wife § 315, also 11 C.J. p 292 note 76 [a], "charge or accept,"⁹⁶ and "sell, convey, charge, and dispose of."⁹⁷

—Charged. The word is not limited to a debit entry in an account book, but may be used in the sense of "imposing a duty upon;"⁹⁸ and when applied to firearms it has been held to mean "loaded."⁹⁹

ferent meanings, according to the subject matter and the context.¹ It is frequently used in a limited sense,² as referring to a formal complaint, information, or indictment and so mere rumors and common talk that a party has committed a felony have been held insufficient to fill the measure required by the word "charged;"³ and in common parlance it signifies the formal commencement of a criminal proceeding by the filing or returning of the accusatory paper in the regular course of judicial proceedings, see the C.J.S. title Criminal Law § 303, also 16 C.J. p 286 note 74 et seq, and 11 C.J. p 294 notes 4-6. In a fuller and more accurate sense the expression may include also the responsibility for the crime itself, and may be applicable to one who has been convicted and is serving a sentence, see the C.J.S. titles Criminal Law § 79, also 16 C.J. p 119 note 80, and 11 C.J. p 294 notes 7, 8, and Extradition § 9, also 25 C.J. p 256 note 47-p 257 note 53. The term is used sometimes to define the status of a prisoner after he has been placed in the hands of the jury for trial, which, in England, was always done immediately after the jury were sworn and before the bill of indictment was read or any of the testimony heard,⁴ in this sense, therefore, meaning that the jury was charged with the fate of the prisoner, and not with the testimony or law of the case.⁵ In particular connections, "charged" has been held equivalent to, or interchangeable or synonymous with, "alleged,"⁶ "imposed,"⁷ and "stated,"⁸ and distinguished from "accused,"⁹ "imput-

—Charging. The present participle of charge.

Charging order. In English practice, an order allowed by statute to be granted to a judgment creditor that the property of the judgment debtor in governing stock, or in the stock of any public company in England, corporate or otherwise, shall stand charged with the payment of the amount for which judgment shall have been recovered with interest; an order obtained from a court or judge under English statutes, binding the stocks or bonds of a judgment debtor with the judgment debt.³⁰

CHARGE TO ENTER HEIR. A writ in Scotch law commanding a person to enter heir to his predecessor within forty days, otherwise an action to be raised against him as if he had entered.⁴¹

CHARIOT. A half coach with four wheels, used for convenience and pleasure.⁴²

CHARITABLE. In its usual and ordinary sense, the word has been held to mean pertaining to almsgiving or the relief of the poor, springing from, or intended for, charity; pertaining to or characterized by charity, benevolence, and kindness; also eleemosynary.⁴³ It has been said that the word "charitable" is frequently thought to mean simply the giving of alms, the relief of the poor, and the care of the sick and distressed, who are unable, through poverty, adequately to care for themselves, but that the word really has a wider meaning than this; and, in this broader sense, describes all the kindly inclinations which men ought to bear toward one another, and which prompt them to promote the general welfare, without respect to poverty or riches, class or condition, and free from all invidious distinctions; and so as used in this general sense has a wide application to gifts proceeding from true benevolence for any purpose favorable to one's fellow men,⁴⁴ and may under some circumstances include all kinds of private benefactions.⁴⁵ "Philanthropic" is not essentially different, nor widely variant, from "charitable;"⁴⁶ and while in a popular sense, the words "educational" and "charitable" are distinguishable, under some circumstances "charitable" may include "educational."⁴⁷

In its legal sense, as employed in the law of charities, see the C.J.S. title Charities § 1, and as used with reference to the exemption of property from taxation, see the C.J.S. title Taxation § 282, also 61 C.J. p 455 notes 20-23.

a. Charity

In its legal sense a charity may be broadly defined as a gift for general public use; in its ordinary sense the term "charity" is employed as meaning benevolence, philanthropy, or goodwill or relief or alms to the poor.

A precise and complete definition of a legal charity, it has been said, is hardly to be found in the books.¹ As stated in Corpus Juris, which statement has been cited and quoted with approval, the word "charity" has a well known and acknowledged meaning broad enough to include every gift for a general public use. Indeed, the word has been shortly and tersely defined as a gift to the public for a public use which extends to the poor as well as to the rich.² In the legal sense a charity may be more fully defined, as it was by Mr. Justice Gray in Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, Mass., 539, 556, as "a gift, to be applied consistently with existing laws, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds or hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or by erecting or maintaining public buildings or works or otherwise lessening the burdens of government."³

While usually the word "charity" implies a gift in some form,⁴ in its widest sense it denotes all the good affections which men ought to bear toward one another, and in that sense it embraces what is generally understood by benevolence, philanthropy, and good will.⁵ In its more restricted and common

Charitable funds. Funds supplied from the gift of the crown, or from the gift of the legislature, or from private gift, for any legal, public, or general purpose, are charitable funds.¹⁵ On the other hand, a fund collected by rates and assessments, being in no respect derived from bounty or charity, is not a charitable one.¹⁶

b. Charitable Gift

A charitable gift may be broadly defined as a gift for a public purpose, either local or general.

In the argument of a famous case, one of counsel defined a charitable or pious gift to be whatever is given for the love of God or for the love of your neighbor, in the catholic and universal sense, given from these motives and to these ends, free from the stain or taint of every consideration that is personal, private, or selfish.¹⁷ This definition has been quoted or stated substantially, although not necessarily adopted, in many cases.¹⁸ A charitable gift has been otherwise defined so as to include every gift for a public purpose, whether local or general, although not a charitable use within the common and narrow sense of those words,¹⁹ a gift to general public use which extends to the poor as well as to the rich,²⁰ and in greater detail as one for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds or hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or by erecting or maintaining public buildings or works or otherwise lessening the burdens of government.²¹

c. Charitable Trust

A charitable trust is one the purpose or object of which is within the legal definition of the term "charity."

The definitions of a charitable trust are frequently identical with, or similar to, the definitions of a charity which have been given in subdivision a of this section,²² and such a trust has been stated to advancement of the public good,³⁴ and every charity which is extensive in its object may, in a certain sense, be called a public charity.³⁵ A "public charity" has also been defined in the same terms as those employed in defining a "charity."³⁶ The phrase "public charity" is not confined to mere almsgiving or to the relief of poverty and distress, but has a wider significance and embraces the improvement and promotion of the happiness of man.³⁷

A public trust is one in which the public at large, or some undetermined portion of it, has a direct interest or property right, or in which the beneficiaries cannot be ascertained with certainty.³⁸

All charities which are recognized as such within the meaning of the law of charitable uses are in some sense public,³⁹ and every public trust, although benefiting the rich and the poor alike, is a charitable trust,⁴⁰ and the terms "public trust" and "charitable trust" have substantially the same meaning, as shown above in subdivision c of this section.

The word "public," when used in connection with a charity, refers to the purpose and intent of the trust as being for the benefit of the public in general, or of some object so general and indefinite in its character as to be deemed of common benefit, and not to the method of its execution. A charitable or public trust may be distributed in private and by a private hand.⁴¹ Neither does the word "public" refer to the source from which the funds are derived, so as to make public subscription a test.⁴²

A gift is a public charity when there is a benefit to be conferred upon the public at large or some portion thereof, or on an indefinite class of persons, as shown below in § 12. Such a gift need not be open to every one in a community, however. By the designation of a class in the community, a charity becomes public, as shown below in § 37.

f. Private Charities or Trusts Distinguished

Public or charitable trusts are distinguishable from private trusts, on the grounds, among others, that the rule against perpetuities does not in general apply to a public or charitable trust and that uncertainty as to beneficiaries does not in general affect the validity of a public or charitable trust.

Generally speaking, charities are either public or private.⁴³ The line of distinction which determines where a private charity ends and a public one begins is at times difficult to locate, and this difficulty has caused much of the apparent want of harmony which prevails among the decisions on this subject.⁴⁴ As respects their existence and validity, public or charitable trusts are distinguished from other trusts⁴⁵ in two particulars: (1) Charitable trusts are not, in general, within the rule against perpetuities, as shown in the C.J.S. title Perpetuities § 30, also 48 C.J. p 986 note 60. In fact a charitable trust contemplates perpetuity.⁴⁶ (2) Charitable trusts are further distinguished from ordinary trusts by the uncertainty of their beneficiaries, that is, a charitable or public trust or a public charity begins only when uncertainty in the recipient begins, and in the case of a public charity it is immaterial that the beneficiaries are indefinite or not ascertained, as shown below in § 39,⁴⁷ or that the trustee is uncertain or incapable of taking, as shown below in §§ 25, 27. A gift or bequest for the benefit or aid of defined persons is not in general a public charity, but a private trust only, as indicated below in § 39. In regard to the administration and enforcement of charitable, as distinguished from private, trusts, different rules apply, such as the one allowing the court to apply the gift cy pres, as shown below in § 52, and the one allowing the state, through the attorney-general, to interpose for the purpose of seeking the proper administration and enforcement of the trust, as shown below in § 58.

a. General Considerations

Briefly stated, the test in determining whether or not a particular organization, is charitable is whether it exists to carry out a purpose recognized in law as charitable, or whether it is maintained for gain, profit, or private advantage.

It is frequently important to determine whether or not a particular corporation, association, society, or other institution is a charitable institution, in view of the facts that such institutions are usually exempt, to some extent at least, from liability for the torts of their servants, as shown below in § 75, that such institutions are generally subject to visitation, as shown below in §§ 53 to 57, and that a rule different from that applicable to other institutions or corporations frequently applies in the distribution of assets on dissolution, as shown below in § 77. So, also, questions as to what institutions are charitable institutions within the meaning of statutory provisions exempting such institutions from taxation frequently arise, and are considered in the C.J.S. title Taxation § 282, also 61 C.J. p 452 note 75—p 456 note 42, § 1161, 61 C.J. p 1679 note 98—p 1680 note 13. The exemption of charitable institutions from assessment for municipal improvements is considered in the C.J.S. title Municipal Corporations § 1342, also 44 C.J. p 540 note 53—p 541 note 64.

The test of a charity and the test of a charitable organization,⁴⁸ or the test of a charitable gift or use and the test of a charitable corporation,⁴⁹ generally speaking, are in law the same; but some cases draw a distinction between organizations which may receive charitable gifts or bequests and those which are exempt from taxation, and confine the latter class to a much smaller number.⁵⁰

A charitable institution has been defined as one for the relief of a certain class of persons, either by alms, education, or care,⁵¹ a corporate body or establishment instituted and organized for public

"Charity" in institutional sense

(1) A charity in the institutional sense is an organization or institution engaged in the free assistance of the poor, incapacitated, distressed. —Young Men's Christian Ass'n of Germantown v. City of Philadelphia, 187 A. 204, 209, 323 Pa. 401, quoting Webster New Int. D., 2d Ed.

(2) "In its technical as well as in its generally accepted meaning, a charity is an institution or association organized for the purpose of granting relief or dispensing some good or benevolence to those who use,⁵² a public institution partaking of some of the duties of government.⁵³ A charitable corporation, in the popular acceptance, is one that freely and voluntarily ministers to the physical needs of those pecuniarily unable to care for themselves.⁵⁴ As frequently stated, charitable associations, corporations, or institutions are such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms of the founders of, and the contributors to, them, to such purposes and in such manner as they have directed.⁵⁵ Their principal aim is to benefit needy ones in other ways than by improving their morals,⁵⁶ although sometimes a corporation formed for the purpose of accomplishing the moral reformation of a certain class of people is treated as a charitable institution.⁵⁷ Their principal and distinctive features are that they have no capital stock and no provision for making dividends or profits, but derive their funds mainly from public and private charity and hold them in trust for the object of the institutions.⁵⁸ In other words, the test of whether an enterprise or institution is charitable is whether it exists to carry out a purpose recognized in law as charitable, or whether it is maintained for gain, profit, or private advantage.⁵⁹ As sometimes stated, in order that a corporation may be regarded as a public charity its controlling purpose must be for the common and public benefit.⁶⁰

In general, the nature of the corporation, as well as its purposes and objects, must be determined from its charter or articles of association,⁶¹ and usually, according to some cases, may not be shown by parol or extrinsic evidence.⁶² There is authority for the view, however, that a corporation which is not organized for profit may show by its charter, constitution, and by-laws, or by extrinsic evidence not inconsistent therewith, that it is organized solely for the purpose of administering a public charity, the foundation of which is derived from private donations,⁶³ and, where it is contended that, notwithstanding the articles of incorporation indicate that the institution is a charitable one, it is not carrying out the purposes of such articles, parol evidence is admissible to contradict the prima facie case made by the articles.⁶⁴ Notwithstanding a corporation is founded for a charitable purpose, it is not a charitable institution if, in its activities, it departs from its eleemosynary character.⁶⁵ A non-charitable corporation which engages in work of a charitable nature is not a charitable institution,⁶⁶ and a corporation which is created by the incorporators or is administered and maintained by their successors for making money is not a public charity, even though at times it may expend money for purposes, or may render gratuitous services, which in common speech are called "charitable."⁶⁷

According to some cases, whether or not an institution is a charitable one is determined more by its deeds than by the methods by which it is sustained, or by its motives,⁶⁸ and it has been held that an institution operated by a municipality by means of funds raised by taxation may be a charitable institution.⁶⁹

Provided a corporation or association can otherwise be classed as a charitable one, the fact that it receives pay from some of the students, inmates, patients, or other persons to whom it extends benefits detracts nothing from its character as a purely charitable institution,⁷⁰ where no profit is made by

There is a distinction between public charities and mutual benefit associations supported by contributions or assessments from their members, whereby the members, or their widows and orphans, become entitled to certain benefits as a personal right. Such an association is not a public charity.⁸⁵ Where, however, an association is engaged in promoting a public charity, and its funds are impressed with a public trust, the fact that the benefits of the association may inure more directly to its members than to those who are not members does not deprive the association of its public character.⁸⁶

c. Cemetery Associations or Corporations

A cemetery association or corporation may or may not be a charitable organization.

It has been held that a cemetery association or corporation is not a charitable organization, notwithstanding it has no capital stock, has never declared dividends, and its trustees receive no compensation for their services, where there is nothing in the articles of association or in the law under which the corporation was incorporated which prevents the conducting of business for profit, the payment of salaries, or the declaration of dividends,⁹⁷ and a like view has been taken even though the corporation has no right to declare a dividend to its members in the event profits are realized; where there is nothing in the charter which compels the application of any part of the corporate funds to charitable uses.⁹⁸ Cemetery corporations organized under some statutes are, however, charitable trusts.⁹⁹

d. Educational Institutions or Organizations

In general the test, in determining whether or not an educational institution is a charitable institution, is whether it is carried on for public benefit or for private gain.

In general, whether or not an institution of learning is or is not charitable, depends on whether it is carried on for public benefit or for private gain;¹ and the fact that a particular institution is supported in whole or in part by voluntary contributions indicates that it is a charitable corporation.² So, an educational institution which is established and endowed or supported by private charity and is not operated for the purpose of gain but in the interest of humanity is, in general, a charitable institution.³ The eleemosynary or charitable character of an educational institution is not destroyed by the fact that it makes a charge for tuition,⁴ and the payment of tuition by its students does not prevent their being considered beneficiaries of the charity.⁵ The controlling purpose must be the common and public benefit in order to constitute a corporation conducting an institution of learning a public charity,⁶ and such a corporation is not a public charity if it was created by the incorporators or has been administered by the successors for the purpose of making money notwithstanding it may at times have expended money for purposes, or rendered gratuitous services, which in common speech are called charitable.⁷

e. Hospitals

Briefly, the test in determining whether or not a hospital is a charitable institution, is whether or not it is maintained for gain or profit.

A hospital may be a public charity or a charitable institution,⁹ as may a corporation organized for the purpose of founding and maintaining a hospital.¹⁰ Briefly, the test which determines whether a hospital is charitable or otherwise is its purpose, that is, whether or not it is maintained for gain, profit, or advantage.¹¹ While it has been held that the clared it to be a religious association engaged in the propagation of the gospel, and that another statute amending the defendant college's charter placed it under the jurisdiction of the synod, was insufficient to show that the college was a public charity, since such facts were not inconsistent with the view that defendant was a private corporation conducted for gain.—*Vermillion v. (1) Hospital paying no dividends and largely supported by donations is charitable institution. — In re

Prange's Will, 243 N.W. 488, 208 Wis. 404.

(2) Evidence that hospital was nonprofit organization devoted to, and furnishing, care without payment or at charge below actual cost, showed that it was a charitable institution.—Hallinan v. Prindle, Cal. App., 62 P.2d 1075.

(3) A hospital, owned and managed by a corporation organized for benevolent purposes, which has no capital stock, declares no dividends, and has earned none, and which devotes all its income to the care of persons sick or injured, and in improving and extending its facilities for so doing, and which receives and cares for patients without discrimination as to their race, creed or wealth, is conducted exclusively for charitable purposes.—Nuns of Third Order of St. Dominic v. Younkin, 235 P. 869, 872, 118 Kan. 554.

(4) A sanitarium organized to nurse and restore to health the sick and minister to the unfortunate of every creed and nation, any profits being put back when earned and none of its income or gifts being diverted to private gain or profit, is purely a public charity.—Barnes v. Providence Sanitarium, Tex.Civ.App., 229 S.W. 588, dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

(5) An institution organized and conducted for care of persons suffering from mental diseases, which was tax exempt and was organized for public welfare without profit to itself or any individual, was a "charitable institution." — Boardman v. Burlingame, 197 A. 761, 123 Conn. 646.

(6) The Savannah Hospital chartered by the general assembly, Acts 1835 pp 131, 132, amended Acts 1872 p 256, was authorized and empowered thereby to conduct an institution eleemosynary in character for the public benefit, and it was not the intention of the legislature that the business so conducted might be for the pecuniary gain or benefit of its managers, officers, or others.—Morton v. Savannah Hospital, 96 S.E. 837, 148 Ga. 438, answers to certified questions conformed to 96 S.E. 888, 22 Ga.App. 607.

Where corporation, administering intention of the legislature in chartering a hospital is fixed by the applicable statutes and that the charter provisions are controlling in determining the status of the hospital,¹² and that where the articles of association show that the corporation which operates a hospital is in fact a noncharitable corporation evidence to show that it is in fact a charitable corporation is not admissible,¹³ according to some cases the status of the hospital is not conclusively determined by its charter,¹⁴ and the question as to its character may be determined not only from the powers and purposes as defined in its articles of incorporation or charter but also from the manner in which it is conducted,¹⁵ or, as otherwise stated, the question as to whether a hospital is maintained for the purpose of charity or for that of profit may be determined, in case the hospital is incorporated, not only from its powers as defined in its charter but also from the manner in which it is conducted.¹⁶ Where a hospital can otherwise be classed as a charitable institution, the fact that patients who are able to pay are required to do so does not deprive it of its charitable character;¹⁷ neither does the fact that the county pays for the services rendered to those who are a legal county charge.¹⁸ Furthermore, the fact that the institution has in-educational trust, operated hospital which charged customary rates and made no pretense of receiving patients unable to pay for services rendered except where payment was guaranteed by independent organization, hospital was not a charitable institution.—Baker v. Board of Trustees of Leland Stanford Junior University, 23 P.2d 1071, 133 Cal.App. 243.

Allegations in pleading as to operation for gain

In respect of Savannah Hospital chartered by Acts 1835 pp 131, 132, amended by Acts 1872 p 256, the charter provisions are controlling and determine its nature as an eleemosynary institution, notwithstanding allegations in a petition that it was conducted for pecuniary gain.—*Morton v. Originally chartered for profit

Where a corporation was organized to conduct a sanitarium for profit but the charter was abandoned and was later used for the purpose of establishing and carrying out a charity, the charter was not conclusive and it was permissible to show that the property was being used exclusively for charitable purposes.—*Knox County Tuberculosis Sanitarium v. Hospital as charitable institution

(1) A hospital not being operated for profit, but at the end of the fiscal year placing in its general fund, and using for its general charitable purposes, any surplus, however derived, above expenses of maintenance and operation, is a charitable institution, although requiring of patients payment of their board according to their circumstances and the accommodations received, and this, although no person may individually have the right to demand admission.—Baylor University v. Boyd, Tex. Civ.App., 18 S.W.2d 700.

(2) A hospital organized and maintained with funds donated, caring for all sick and injured persons brought to it, charging those who are able to pay and treating free of charge those who are not, operated under a board of trustees consisting of the Protestant Episcopal bishop and the rector and church wardens of a specified church, is a charitable institution.—*Bishop Randall Hospital v. creased the value of its plant from money received from patients who pay and from donations does not deprive the hospital of its charitable character.¹⁹ The fact that a department of a hospital earns a slight profit does not affect the status of the hospital as a charitable institution.²⁰

If a hospital is organized by a corporation not for the purpose of making a profit, but to take care of injured employees, who are received into the hospital without charge, the hospital is a charitable enterprise, even though the employees contribute to its support.²¹ However, if the hospital is conducted for profit, although receiving free of charge patients unable to pay, it is not a charitable institution.²²

The fact that a corporation which is organized as a private corporation operates, in accordance with its purpose, a hospital as a public charity or institution does not make such corporation a public corporation, even though the corporation receives donations from the government or public funds to assist it in carrying on its work.²³

§ 3. Origin and Development

Trusts for charitable uses are of ancient origin, and the rudiments of the English law as to charities had their source in the civil law.

The rise and development of the law of charitable uses furnishes a most interesting chapter in the history of equity jurisprudence,²⁴ few questions having been the subject of more laborious investigation, or having given rise to greater conflict of opinion, than that which relates to the origin of the peculiar jurisdiction of equity in respect of charities.²⁵

Trusts for charitable uses are of ancient origin.²⁶ The rudiments of the law of charities in England were derived from the civil law.²⁷ The principle of charity was known also to the Jews,²⁸ who early favored aid toward self-help, and education suitable to that end, but except in cases of actual necessity disapproved of almsgiving as being the lowest form of charity;²⁹ and probably, as Sir Edward Coke observed, in the reign of Elizabeth, "no time was so barbarous, as to abolish learning and knowledge, nor so uncharitable, as to prohibit relieving the poor."³⁰ The oft recurring prayer, "This do in work of charity," in the earliest appeals to the English chancellor by those who had no remedy, shows that the common, if not the equitable, concept of the term under christian influences was the same in remote as in modern times.³¹ In 1601, the English parliament enacted the statute of 43 Elizabeth c 4, which is frequently referred to as the "Statute of Charitable Uses," and that act has had a most important bearing on the subject of public charities from that date until the present time.³² The statute of 43 Elizabeth was repealed in England in 1888, by the statute of 51 & 52 Victoria c 42 § 13,³³ but the repealing act incorporated and continued in force the preamble. While the courts of the various states differ as to whether this statute is in force as a part of the common law, as shown in the C.J.S. title Common Law § 13, also 11 C.J. p 309 note 39, p 310 note 43, 12 C.J. p 193 note 30 [c], and there has been some difference of opinion as to whether such statute conferred

Contents and effect of statute generally

"This statute [43 Eliz. c 4] enumerated objects considered charitable, and placed devices, gifts and conveyances to such charitable uses without the statutes of mortmain, and enabled courts of chancery, in the exercise of their inherent jurisdiction over matters of trust and confidence, to give force and effect to such charitable uses as fell within the letter and spirit of those enumerated in the statute."—Biscoe v. upon courts of equity the broad jurisdiction exercised by them to recognize and uphold charities, as shown below in § 6 b, the statute is important by reason of its enumeration in its preamble of purposes and objects which are considered charitable, as the courts of practically all jurisdictions give consideration and weight to this enumeration, regardless of the foundation of the law of charities in the particular jurisdiction, as shown below in § 12.

§ 4. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

In addition to the English statute of 43 Elizabeth c 4, which is considered in various connections supra § 3 and infra §§ 6, 12, other statutes relating to or affecting charities have been enacted and are considered in this Title in connection with the particular subject matter to which such statutes relate or which they affect.

II. CREATION, VALIDITY, AND CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL

§ 5. Creation and Requisites

A charitable trust may be created by will or deed, and special technical words are not required in order to establish a charitable use or trust.

It has been stated broadly that to constitute a charitable use there must be a donor, a trustee competent to take, a use restricted to a charitable purpose, and a definite beneficiary.³⁴ In general, however, a court of equity will not allow a gift for charitable uses to fail because the person designated as trustee is incapable of taking or acting as trustee, as shown in § 27, and, according to the rule usually recognized, indefiniteness of the beneficiaries is a characteristic of a charitable trust, as shown in § 39.

In order to create a valid charitable trust, it is essential that an intention to devote a fund to a charitable purpose shall be evidenced,³⁵ and that the trust shall be clear, definite, and certain,³⁶ that is, the words of creation must announce a definite subject and object and there must be a sufficient declaration of the terms of the trust.³⁷ The certainty or uncertainty of the trust is determined by the applicable rules or laws of construction and applicable statutory provisions.³⁸

The founder of a charity may fix and define its nature.³⁹

A charitable trust may be created either by will⁴⁰ or by deed;⁴¹ and, where a donor successively makes a deed of trust, a will, and a declaration of trust with regard to the same property and for the same charitable purpose, the trust will be applied in accordance with the declaration of trust, and the deed and will are to be considered only so far as they tend to throw light on the intention of the donor.⁴²

While a charitable bequest or a bequest to a charitable corporation to aid in carrying out the purposes for which it has been organized does not necessarily create a trust in a strict legal sense,⁴³ it has been stated broadly that, to effect a dedication of property to a charitable use, it is necessary that it shall be stamped with a trust.⁴⁴ According to some cases, however, a gift for a charitable purpose may be effective whether it is a gift in trust or is a direct gift to the charity.⁴⁵

The owner of property may create a charitable trust by a declaration that he holds such property on a charitable trust⁴⁶ or by a transfer to another who is to hold such property on a charitable trust.⁴⁷

No formality of language⁴⁸ nor special technical words⁴⁹ are necessary to establish a charitable use or trust; the court looks through form to substance.⁵⁰ So failure of the donor to make an express declaration of trust does not prevent the creation of a charitable trust,⁵¹ since a trust for the purposes stated or intended may be implied even though the donor does not use express words of trust.⁵² According to some cases, a conveyance in the nature of a gift to a charitable use may be regarded as a conveyance to hold on the trust declared.⁵³ The intention on the part of the donor of property to create a charitable trust must exist, however, in order to create such a trust,⁵⁴ and it is necessary that the instrument should describe the subject matter of the trust with certainty, as shown below in § 46, that it should indicate at least generally the charitable purpose of the donor, as shown below in § 20, and that it should describe the class of beneficiaries from which the ultimate individual recipients of the bounty shall be selected, as shown below in § 39.

A gift may be regarded as a charity notwithstanding it is not denominated a charity in the instrument which evidences the gift.⁵⁵

The requirements of the statute of wills and the statute of frauds by which the entire scheme of a charity should be in writing do not prevent an unincorporated charitable society from taking under a devise of realty for its benefit, if its by-laws sufficiently designate its objects as coinciding with the purposes of the devise.⁵⁶ In some jurisdictions a provision of the statute of frauds requiring a declaration of trust to be in writing applies only to trusts in land and does not apply to a charitable trust in personal property.⁵⁷

57. N.J.—Peter E. Leddy Post No. 19 of American Legion v. Roberts, Ch., 129 A. 148.

It is necessary that there should be a gift,⁵⁸ and the doctrine of charitable uses is inapplicable to a grant or purchase for a consideration in return.⁵⁹ So charitable trusts are usually created voluntarily and not by compulsory payments,⁶⁰ although there is authority for the view that an institution operated by a municipality by means of funds raised by taxation may be a charitable institution, as shown above in § 2 a.

A gift will not be deemed charitable merely from the nature of the professional character of the devisee,⁶¹ unless, according to some cases, the devisee or legatee is an association or corporation organized and conducted solely for charitable purposes, in which case a gift to the society by name, without further restriction or limitation as to use, will be deemed to be made for the purposes for which the society was founded, as indicated below in §§ 17, 20.

Where a conveyance is made of property to be held in trust, it is none the less for a charitable use because the founders or contributors to the fund reserve to themselves the right of partaking of the benefits of the charity,⁶² nor because they are members of the society for whose use and benefit the property is held.⁶³

- a. General considerations
- b. Independently of statute
- c. Statutory regulation and authorization

a. General Considerations

Charitable gifts and trusts are favorites of the law and of the courts, and the courts will declare valid, and give effect to, such gifts and trusts where it is possible to do so consistently with established principles or rules of law.

Charitable gifts and trusts are favorites of the law⁶⁴ and of the courts,⁶⁵ or, more specifically, are

11 C.J. p 308 note 25.

Doubt as to whether gift is charitable

(1) In case of doubt as to whether a gift is charitable, a construction favoring a public charity is preferred.—Powers v. Home for Aged Women, R.I., 192 A. 770, 110 A.L.R. 1361—Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Williams, 148 A. 189, 50 R.I. 385, 74 A.L.R. 664.

(2) Doubtful devise is construed as gift to public charity, when possible.—City of Providence v. Payne, 134 A. 276, 47 R.I. 444.

(3) Gift in somewhat uncertain terms will be held one to public charity, if purpose was to limit property to benevolent public use.—City of Providence v. Payne, supra.

Educational bequest

In a case in which the court said that the bequest involved was an "educational" bequest and not a "charitable or religious" bequest, it was held that, where one of two possible constructions would sustain the bequest, such construction should be adopted.—Kibbe v. City of Rochester, D.C.N.Y., 57 F.2d 542.

In consequence of the favorable consideration extended to charitable gifts or trusts, they are usually sustained although vaguely expressed.⁷³ If the trust instrument shows the intention of the creator or donor to create a charitable trust and the interpretation of the language used discloses the principal or essential elements of contracts and of a valid trust, such instrument is not void for want of certainty.⁷⁴

Where there are statutes relating to the subject, they will be liberally construed in order to sustain the trust, as shown below in subdivision c of this section, and even in those states where formerly the statutes did not favor charitable trusts, gifts to charitable, benevolent, scientific, or educational institutions are not against public policy, or restricted beyond what is strictly required by the statutes.⁷⁵

The court will not, however, create a gift where there is none;⁷⁶ it is the duty of the court carefully to weigh the objections made against the gifts or bequests, and to give effect to any sufficient to render the gifts or bequests void in law,⁷⁷ and courts of equity will not ignore established principles of law in order to give charitable bequests effect.⁷⁸ Furthermore the rule favoring a liberal construction applies only to a public charity and does not extend to a trust for a private purpose.⁷⁹ It is said that while charitable gifts are favorites of the law, they are not so when made at or near the time of impending death, in view of a statutory provision voiding gifts in trust for charitable purposes within less than a prescribed period before the donor's death.⁸⁰

The court will not consider whether or not the gift is a wise one,⁸¹ and it has been stated broadly that the court will not concern itself with the propriety of the trust or with the character of the beneficiary.⁸² Furthermore it is not necessary to pass on the question as to the practicability of the enforcement of the terms of a charitable trust created by will where the institution which is the beneficiary of the trust is in a position to comply with the terms of the trust and the authorities of such institution are conducting it in general accordance with such terms.⁸³

While the fact that the instrument which attempts to create a charitable trust provides no way to carry out the clear intention of the donor as expressed in the instrument has been regarded as a ground for declaring the attempted trust invalid,⁸⁴ according to some cases failure of the donor to formulate practical plans to carry out the charitable purpose

Rejecting irrational intention

The court, in construing a will attempting to create a charitable trust, will not adopt a theory of an irrational intention, impossible of fulfillment, when a rational intention, easy of fulfillment and beneficial in results, can be gathered from the words of the testator.—Sparks v. Woolverton, 99 So. 102, 210 Ala. 669.

Capability of enforcement

Charitable devises should be upheld provided they are sufficiently definite to permit of enforcement in a court of equity and are not in conflict with existing laws.—Gossett v. Swinney, C.C.A.Mo., 53 F.2d 772, affirming, D.C., Irwin v. Swinney, 44 F. 2d 172 and certiorari denied Gossett v. Swinney, 52 S.Ct. 497, 286 U.S. 545, 76 L.Ed. 1282.

Preference to one party

As respects contention that legacies for charitable purposes are favorites of courts, courts can have no fixed policy which will admit of operation of a principle by which one party to litigation will be favored to detriment of other party therein.—In re Kline's Estate, 32 P.2d 677, 138 Cal.App. 514.

Teaching certain religious doctrines

Where testator provided for the founding of a chair in a college controlled by a specified church and for the teaching of certain religious doctrines, and the college was then teaching the same doctrines, the court was not called on to speculate as to what might happen if the authorities of the college should change their views or if others who held contrary views should obtain control of the college.—Bailey v. Waddy, 243 S.W. 21, 195 Ky. 415.

will not defeat the gift,⁸⁵ nor will the selection of illegal or impracticable methods.⁸⁶ A provision giving judges who are to appoint the trustees authority to formulate rules for their government does not invalidate the trust, as conferring a discretionary power in the administration of the trust.⁸⁷ A provision in an instrument under which an institution for a charitable purpose is to be established, giving power to a board of trustees to make rules and regulations for the admission and government of inmates, does not authorize the board to make rules and regulations which are at variance with the charitable purpose set forth in such instrument, and does not, therefore, render the trust invalid.⁸⁸

Where the trust instrument creates but one trust for a charitable purpose which is to be put in operation on the death of the donor, the trust is not rendered invalid by a provision reserving to the donor a life estate in, the revenue from, and the management of, the property devoted to the trust, by a conditional provision for the sale by the donor, with the consent of the trustees, of the property devoted to the trust, by a conditional provision for the purchase, during the lifetime of the donor, of land for the purpose of the charitable institution contemplated, or by a conditional provision for the waiver and surrender of the life estate by the donor and the establishment, during his lifetime, of the charitable institution contemplated, where there is no intention to terminate the charitable trust, to affect the title of the trustees to the property devoted to the trust or the substituted proceeds, or to affect the administration of the trust by the trustees; such provisions do not create passive trusts so as to affect the validity of the charitable trust created by the trust instrument.⁸⁹ A charitable trust or gift is not defeated by a provision in the instrument creating it that the trustee is to receive fees and compensation for his services,⁹⁰ by a provision that the gift shall not be liable for the debts of the organization to which the gift is made,⁹¹ by a provision for the maintenance of a dance hall as one of the means of promoting the dominant purpose of the trust,⁹² or by the fact that the carrying out of the charitable purpose of the donor is made dependent on contributions by others for a like purpose.⁹³ The fact that one of the parties to an agreement to make mutual wills for a charitable purpose fails to comply with the agreement does not invalidate the testamentary gift for such purpose made by the other party to the agreement.⁹⁴ The fact alone that the time specified in a will for the accomplishment of a charitable purpose expires before it is accomplished will not defeat a testamentary gift for such purpose.⁹⁵

According to some cases, a devise of land to an unincorporated charitable society is not necessarily void because of the devisee's nonexistence, but the legal title descends to the heir at law in trust for the society.⁹⁶ Testamentary provisions for payment of income to charitable corporations are not void on the theory that such corporations and their successors may cease to exist with the result that the residuary estate would vest in the heirs of the testator.⁹⁷ When a deed is clearly for a charitable use, the trustees named therein take the legal estate in fee, although the deed does not in terms run to their heirs and assigns, as shown below in § 43. Even if the trustee or beneficiary is, at the time of the gift, incapable of taking, or not in existence, equity will in general uphold the gift, and, if necessary appoint a trustee, as shown below in §§ 27, 37.

Amount of gift. The mere fact that the fund which constitutes the subject matter of a charitable trust is large does not render the trust invalid as against public policy.⁹⁹ That the organization which is to receive income from a trust for charitable purposes has not previously disbursed as much money as it will receive if the trust is sustained does not invalidate the trust, at least in the absence of a showing that such organization cannot, under its charter, properly expend the income which it will receive from the trust.¹ According to some cases, the test as to the reasonableness of the amount to be devoted to a charitable purpose under a will is not applied as between the next of kin of the testator and the charitable trust so as to defeat the intention of the testator as expressed in the will.² A limitation as to the amount to be disbursed for each beneficiary does not invalidate a trust for charitable purposes otherwise enforceable.³ The validity of a charitable trust does not depend on the adequacy of the fund to execute it to the full extent of the intention of testator.⁴

In Pennsylvania, in determining whether or not a bequest in trust for the maintenance of a burial lot is unreasonable in amount, many factors are to be considered, among which is the income which, under prevailing conditions, may be obtained on investments which the trustee is authorized to make. The amount which other lot owners have regarded as necessary for maintenance is not necessarily controlling, and the desires of the surviving members of the testator's family cannot prevail over the specific terms of the bequest.⁵ Such a bequest should be construed liberally,⁶ and the testator's liberality should not be thwarted unless the amount fixed by him is so disproportionate to the needs as to indicate clearly that such amount is excessive.⁷ The bequest is not avoided merely because the interest on the amount bequeathed may exceed the amount sufficient to maintain the lot.⁸

b. Independently of Statute

In general courts of equity have original and inherent jurisdiction to recognize and uphold charities, independently of the statute of 43 Elizabeth c 4.

While it was never seriously questioned that courts of equity, by reason of their jurisdiction over trusts in general and without reference to the statute of 43 Elizabeth c 4, had jurisdiction over charitable trusts when they presented no unusual features,⁹ it was at one time supposed that the power of such courts to effectuate charitable donations in favor of uncertain beneficiaries, or of those in whom no legal estate vested, originated in that statute and had no existence at common law prior thereto. This was asserted in the supreme court of the United States by Chief Justice Marshall in 1819.¹⁰ The position thus taken was not universally accepted, however,¹¹ and the question again came before the supreme court in 1844, when, after an elaborate examination of authorities and of ancient records of the court of chancery, then for the first time made available, it was held that the statute of 43 Elizabeth did not in any respect enlarge the jurisdiction of chancery, but that prior to and independently of that statute, charities were sustained

A trust created by a will giving a fund exceeding four million dollars to trustees to be used in founding a home for aged bachelors and widowers, for the purchase of land and erection of buildings, and for the maintenance of the home, was not, because of the size of the fund, contrary to public policy and void.—Kitchen v. and enforced in chancery, irrespective of indefiniteness in the beneficiaries or lack of trustees.¹² This, with some qualifications as to the degree of indefiniteness permissible in the beneficiaries, has since generally been regarded as the law, and it is well settled in most of the states that courts of equity have an original and inherent jurisdiction to recognize and uphold charities, independently of the statute of 43 Elizabeth.¹³ And in some jurisdictions, the principles of law as to charitable uses which antedated such statute are in force except as modified by constitutional and statutory provisions, judicial decisions, and local conditions.¹⁴

It must be noted, however, that in some of the jurisdictions stating this rule, the statute of 43 Elizabeth is held to be in force as part of the common law, as shown in the C.J.S. title Common Law § 13, also 12 C.J. p 193 note 30 [c].

In some cases, it has been stated that even the want of any court vested with jurisdiction to enforce it does not affect the validity of a charitable trust.¹⁵

c. Statutory Regulation and Authorization

Some state statutes are, in substance at least, in accord with the statute of 43 Elizabeth c 4. Other statutes have restored or established the doctrine or law of charitable uses to some extent at least.

The statute of 43 Elizabeth c 4, relating to charitable uses, is a part of the common law of some states but not of others, as shown in the C.J.S. title Common Law § 13, also 11 C.J. p 309 note 39, p 310 note 43, 12 C.J. p 193 note 30 [c]. In some states in which the statute itself is not formally recognized as part of the common law, its principles have been approved and adopted with certain modifications.¹⁶ Some state statutes are substantially the same as this English statute,¹⁷ and other statutes, by express reference to the English statute, have made it applicable to gifts and trusts for charitable purposes.¹⁸

In some jurisdictions the passage of statutes containing provisions that charitable grants, gifts, devises, or bequests shall not fail because of the indefiniteness of beneficiaries, and other provisions, has operated to restore or establish the doctrine or law of charitable uses to some extent at least.¹⁹

19. In Michigan

(1) Except as introduced by Act 122, P.A.1907, as amended by Act 125, P.A.1911, the doctrine of charitable uses never obtained, and so-called charitable trusts were subject to rules applicable to other trusts.—Moore v. O'Leary, 146 N.W. 661, 180 Mich. 261, Ann.Cas.1916A 373—11 C.J. p 310 note 48 [a].

(2) It seems that the doctrine of charitable uses has been introduced to some extent by the foregoing statute.—Moore v. O'Leary, supra.

In New York

(1) The rule stated in the text has been recognized or applied in considering the effect of L.1893 c 701, and amendments, Pers.Prop.L. § 12, Real Prop.L. § 113, sometimes referred to as the Tilden Act.—In re Briglin's Will, 203 N.Y.S. 646, 298 App.Div. 511—In re Potts' Will, 199 N.Y.S. 880, 205 App.Div. 147—In re Tiffany's Estate, 285 N.Y.S. 971, 157 Misc. 873—11 C.J. p 310 note 48.

(2) The enactment of the statute was part of a general scheme to restore to the courts of equity the power formerly exercised by chancery in the regulation of gifts for charitable purposes.—In re Frasch's Estate, 156 N.E. 656, 245 N.Y. 174, affirming 215 N.Y.S. 848, 216 App. Div. 797, affirming 211 N.Y.S. 635, 125 Misc. 381—11 C.J. p 310 note 48.

(3) Prior to the enactment of the statute, after some decisions to the contrary, it was finally established that, as a result of the repeal in 1783 of the statute of 43 Elizabeth c 4, the general law as to charities no longer obtained.—Holland v. Alcock, 16 N.E. 305, 108 N.Y. 312, 2 Am.S.R.

The provisions of a statute authorizing charitable gifts or trusts are to be read in the light of its history and purpose,²⁰ and it is to be construed liberally and applied in order to sustain trusts for charitable purposes.²¹ Such a statute is not retroactive in that it does not apply to the will of a testator who died before the enactment of the statute.²² It is not, however, rendered inapplicable to a trust provided for in a will, on the ground that the statute would be given retroactive effect, where the statute was enacted intermediate the making of the will and the death of the testator, in view of the rule that a will is effective only as of the time of the death of the testator.²³ While such a statute has been regarded as not applicable to an absolute gift,²⁴ it has been held or recognized that, even though the donor does not use express words of trust, a trust for the purposes stated or intended may be implied to bring the gift within the operation of the statute.²⁵ An unincorporated association, which seeks to take a legacy on the ground that such legacy is a gift for a charitable or benevolent use, within the meaning of a statute authorizing such a gift, has the burden of proving that its objects are solely such as to bring it within the beneficial terms of such statute.²⁶

In Virginia, the question as to validity has arisen in connection with the indefiniteness of beneficiaries and is considered below in § 39. Both in this state and in West Virginia certain classes of indefinite charities have been validated by statute and charitable trusts restored to that extent.²⁷ In Louisiana, a statute authorizes donations or bequests of any description of property to trustees for educational, charitable, or literary purposes,²⁸ and such statute, even though construed to permit the creation by will of a perpetual trust for charitable purposes, does not violate the constitutional provision which forbids the creation of substitutions, fidei commissi, and trust estates for a period of more than ten years after the death of the testator, in view of the further constitutional provision that such prohibition shall not apply to donations for educational, charitable, or religious purposes.²⁹

Statutory provisions which limit the amount of a testator's estate which he may give for charitable uses do not apply to gifts effected by instruments other than wills.³⁰

tude toward the association was not sufficient to show that the objects of the association were such as to entitle it to the benefit of the statute.—In re Howells' Estate, 260 N.Y.S. 598, 145 Misc. 557, modified on other grounds 261 N.Y.S. 859, 146 Misc. 169.

Construction of statute

Statute validating gifts to "church," "religious congregation," or "religious society" is restricted to local unincorporated body or congregation, and does not include church at large in its denominational sense, and statute does not apply to bequest of money to be administered by named pastor, who should pay interest drawn by money to "the Methodist Church South for missionary work where he thinks it will do the greatest good."—*Moore v. Restrictions on testamentary dispositions for charitable purposes in

Statutes of mortmain and similar statutes. The earlier English statutes forbidding, under the penalty of forfeiture, the conveyance of lands as gifts to religious houses and the Mortmain Act of 9 Geo II c 36, enacted in 1736, and substantially re-enacted in 1888, 51 & 52 Victoria c 42, prohibiting dispositions of land to charitable uses, unless by deed made twelve months, and enrolled in chancery six months, before the donor's death, did not in general extend to the colonies;³¹ and generally speaking, in the United States the English statutes of mortmain are not, and never have been, in force.³² In Mississippi, however, constitutional and statutory provisions invalidate certain devises and bequests for charitable or religious purposes, as shown in the C.J.S. title Wills § 108, also 68 C.J. p 534 note 57-p 535 note 67, and, under the statutes of a number of states, it is necessary to the validity of a devise or bequest for a religious, charitable, or educational purpose that the will be executed a specified time prior to the death of the testator, as shown in the C.J.S. title Wills § 109, also 68 C.J. p 535 note 68-p 546 note 47. A statutory provision declaring void dispositions of real or personal property where bequeathed, devised, or conveyed in trust for religious or charitable purposes, except the same be done by deed or will at least a specified time before the death of the testator or alienor, has been construed to apply to an attempted gift, other than testamentary, of personal property for a purpose within the statute, made within the prescribed period before the death of the donor.³³ A legacy to a religious society has been upheld, however, notwithstanding a statutory provision that all grants or gifts to a religious corporation of any real estate or of money to be laid out in real estate shall be by deed duly executed, delivered, acknowledged, and recorded at least a specified time before the death of the donor or grantor, where there is no direction in the will that the amount of the legacy shall be laid out in real estate.³⁴

Some statutes impose restrictions as to the amount of property which a charitable corporation may hold, as shown below in § 30.

Statute of uses and similar statutes. In some jurisdictions in the United States in which the statute of uses, 27 Hen. VIII c 10, which was designed to make the beneficiary's interest a legal instead of an equitable estate and to defeat the trust, has been considered, it has been held or recognized that the statute does not apply to these trusts which in their nature are so continuing and executory that they cannot be terminated and executed without violence to the donor's intention, especially when the trustee appointed by the donor has a discretion as to the method of promoting the objects intended.³⁵ Statutes abolishing uses and trusts, except as therein authorized and modified, without distinguishing between charitable and other uses, have, however, been regarded in some jurisdictions as applicable to charitable uses and trusts,³⁶ and as abolishing, to

Charitable Uses Act

In Pennsylvania, the mortmain statutes have been effective only in so far as they prohibit dedications to so-called superstitious uses and grants to corporations without a statutory license.—Miller v. Porter, 53 Pa. 292.—Pittsburgh Methodist Church v. Remington, 1 Watts 219, 26 Am.D. 61.

33. In Pennsylvania

(1) Act 1855 § 11, rendered void a subscription agreement not supported by consideration for a purpose within the statute, made within the prescribed period.—Reimensnyder v. Gans, 2 A. 425, 110 Pa. 17.

(2) A like rule applied to a promissory note made as a gift within the prescribed period.—In re Luebbe, 36 A. 322, 179 Pa. 447.

(3) In an earlier case, however, which according to In re Luebbe, supra, had been practically overruled, the view was taken that the statute did not invalidate a gift of personal property, which the court regarded as executed, notwithstanding the donor died within the prescribed period.—McGlade's Appeal, 99 Pa. 338, 11 Wkly.N.C. 257.

(2) In Wisconsin, in a case in which personal property was involved, it was said that it was not intended to commit the court as to whether the rule that the statute of uses and trusts did not affect testamentary gifts of personal property for charitable uses applied to like gifts of real estate.—Harrington v. Pier, supra.

(3) In earlier cases the view was taken that the statute applied to charitable uses and trusts in land.—Ruth v. Oberbrunner, 40 Wis. 238. 11 C.J. p 310 note 46.

great extent at least, the ancient law as to such uses and trusts.³⁷

7. Certainty as to Manner of Execution

The founder need not specify in detail the plan of administering the trust, in order to create a valid charitable trust, but may leave the determination as to such details to the trustee under the guidance of a court of equity.

It is not essential to the validity of a charitable trust that the founder should specify in detail the plan of administering the trust.³⁸ In general, where he describes the general nature of the trust, he may leave the details of administration to be determined by the trustee³⁹ under the guidance of a court of equity,⁴⁰ and such trust may be valid, notwithstanding the founder leaves such details for the determination of the trustee,⁴¹ or fails to designate the duties of the trustee.⁴² The method of execution provided for may, however, be so ambiguous and uncertain as to render the trust void for uncertainty.⁴³

The mere fact that the donor intentionally leaves to the trustee, subject to judicial control, the determination as to the time for the establishment of the charity provided for does not render the trust void for uncertainty.⁴⁴

Indefinite powers

Trust authorizing trustees to promote improvements in government and assist in other connected matters by lawful means was not invalid as investing trustees with indefinite powers.—Collier v. Lindley, 166 P. 526, 203 Cal. 641.

Provision not rendering trust invalid

Testamentary trust for construction of gate or arch in city park was not invalidated by provision for selection of testator's friends to act in conjunction with the city officials in the construction of such gate or arch.—Haggin v. International Trust Co., 169 P. 138, 69 Colo. 135, L.R.A. 918B 710.

Memorial

A residuary bequest of money to a town for the erection of a monument to the memory of testatrix's brother, a prominent citizen of the town, otherwise valid, was not invalid because testatrix left the site and details to the discretion of the proper town authorities.—Lawrence v. Prosser, 104 A. 772, 89 N.J.Eq. 248. Certainty as to purpose as affected by leaving details of administration to trustee see infra § 20.

Administration by court of equity

Where the purpose of a charitable trust is distinctly declared, and trustees are appointed by the will to carry out the intent of the testator, and the beneficiary may be ascertained, it is not void on the ground of being too indefinite and uncertain to be administered by a court of equity.—Jones' Unknown Heirs v. Dorchester, Tex.Civ.App., 224 S.W. 596, dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

§ 8. Partial Invalidity

Partial invalidity does not of necessity render a provision for a charity entirely void.

The mere fact that a testator attempted to create by will charitable trusts which are invalid does not render invalid charitable trusts created by the will, which are otherwise valid.⁴⁵ The fact that the instrument creating a charitable trust attempts to impose an invalid condition does not necessarily invalidate the trust as to its paramount charitable purpose.⁴⁶

Questions as to the effect on the validity of an attempted charitable trust or gift of including in the same instrument provisions for trusts or gifts for charitable and for noncharitable purposes are considered in § 22.

§ 9. Estoppel or Waiver as to Defects or Objections

Consult Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 10. Persons Entitled to Question Validity

One without interest cannot question the validity of a charity. Only the state can question the legality and powers of the beneficiary.

Establishment and maintenance by income of estate

Provision in a will that, as soon as possible after the death of the testatrix, the trustee shall establish and maintain, by the income from the estate, a home for sick, helpless mothers and their babies did not render the trust void for uncertainty, where, by other clauses of the will, testatrix had made provision for payment of legacies and annuities out of income, so that she could not know when sufficient money would be available to establish and maintain the home.—Barr v. Geary, 142 N.E. 622, 82 Ind.App. 5.

⁴⁵ Ohio.—Becker v. Fisher, 147 N.E. 744, 112 Ohio St. 284—Graham v. Bergin, 18 Ohio App. 35.

⁴⁶ Ohio.—Graham v. Bergin, supra.

Provision for payment of fixed rate of interest

Under will bequeathing property to city on condition that it would legally accept it and give pledge for payment semiannually to trustees under the will of interest on the fund at six per cent for use by trustees for charitable purposes, the charitable scheme was the testator's dominant purpose, and was not invalidated by the invalid provision as to rate of interest, as such provision, if regarded as condition, would yield to the overruling purpose.—Attorney General v. City of Lowell, 141 N.E. 45, 246 Mass. 312.

In accordance with the rule applicable to wills generally, stated in the C.J.S. title Wills § 329, also 68 C.J. p. 929 note 43, persons without an interest may not question a testamentary gift for a charitable purpose,⁴⁷ but the sole heir of the testator may attack an attempted gift which is void where no other valid disposition of the property involved is made by the will.⁴⁸

Only the state may question the legality of an organization and the capacity of the beneficiary.⁴⁹ Questions as to who may raise the objection that a particular corporation is incompetent to act as trustee, and an objection based on the amount of property which a corporate trustee may take and hold, are considered below in § 30.

§ 11. Construction in General

In construing and applying the terms of an instrument creating a charitable trust the intention of the creator will be carried out as nearly as possible.

In construing and applying the terms of an instrument creating a charitable trust, the intention of the donor or testator must be carried out as nearly as possible,⁵⁰ even though, according to some cases at least, the particular manner indicated by the donor is illegal or impracticable,⁵¹ and even though the fund could be more efficiently or judiciously administered in another place or applied to a different object.⁵² In construing such instruments, courts consider charity as the substance.⁵³

In ascertaining the meaning of a charitable trust, the language used should be given a liberal construction and one favorable to its purpose,⁵⁴ and it has been said that, in view of the rule that courts favor charities, the trust instrument is construed most strongly against the donor in determining whether or not a general charitable intent has been expressed.⁵⁵

47. Heirs at law and distributees

(1) The sole heir and distributee could not successfully attack a will because of a bequest to a donee without capacity to take, where there were valid, alternative bequests.—In re Brown's Estate, 165 N.W. 929, 198 Mich. 544.

(2) Heirs could not successfully complain of a testamentary gift as defective or void where such gift was subject to a statutory provision that, in so far as it exceeds the powers of the courts to determine the matter, the disposition of the property shall be taken to have been made a subject to be further regulated and disposed of by the legislature. The rule was applied where one ground of invalidity asserted was that the income of the corporate beneficiary would be increased beyond that which it legally could receive. The rule was also applied in deciding that it was not necessary for the court to make a determination as to the effect of the act of June 8, 1891, Pub.L. 211, Pa.St.1920 § 5596, requiring real property devised for charitable purposes to be sold within five years from the time the right of possession shall accrue.—In re Darlington's Estate, 137 A. 268, 289 Pa. 297.

Residuary clause

Where general intention of testator to create charity appears from will, courts, in dealing with ambiguous residuary clause, will lean in favor of broad rather than restricted construction.—In re Somerville's Estate, 55 P.2d 597, 12 Cal.App.2d 430.

55. Cal.—O'Hara v. Grand Lodge, I. O. G. T. of State of California, 2 P.2d 21, 213 Cal. 131.

In general, the donor's intention is to be determined from the instrument itself and the attendant circumstances.⁵⁶ The terms used are not to be measured separately, but each is to be considered in its relation to the entire provision, and the general meaning of each restricted by its associations, and made subordinate to the main purpose.⁵⁷ However, a distinction is made in construing charitable gifts between those parts of the instrument which define the gift and its purposes and those which relate only to the mode of administration.⁵⁸ The practical construction given to a charitable foundation of doubtful meaning by those charged with its administration through many years is entitled to great weight in ascertaining the correct construction.⁵⁹

In the construction of donations to charitable corporations, the purpose for which the donee was incorporated,⁶⁰ or, in the case of an unincorporated association, the objects and operations of the association,⁶¹ may be considered; and a second gift to a charity is properly interpreted as was that previously established.⁶²

A gift to the trustees of an institution is in law and in fact a gift to the institution itself.⁶³

Evidence to aid construction. To aid in the construction, extrinsic evidence of the circumstances is usually admissible;⁶⁴ and, in case of obscurity and ambiguity, resort may be had to the use of the charity which has already been made by the trustees.⁶⁵ In the case of a testamentary gift, where the language used is plain and unambiguous, extrinsic evidence, such as of testator's declarations remote from the execution of the will, is not admissible to show the intention of the testator.⁶⁶ Evidence, otherwise competent, which tends to assist in the application of language of the will, which is clear and certain on its face, to the object contemplated by the will, may be admissible.⁶⁷

Language of instrument

Whether a bequest was intended for charitable purposes depends on the intention of the testatrix, to be ascertained largely from the will itself.—De La Pole v. Lindley, 204 P. 15, 118 Wash. 398.

(2) Provision that devise of farm to town for benefit of poor "is upon condition" that town erect buildings and wall was not condition subsequent attached to devise.—City of Providence v. Payne, 184 A. 276, 47 R.I. 444.

Knowledge of statute

In the case of a bequest in trust with direction that the fund shall be invested and the net income paid to the treasurer of the public schools of a township, to be used to improve and elevate the standard of practical education in such township as directed by the school directors, and the further direction that no part of the money paid to the school treasurer shall be used to lower the tax rate in said township, it was held that it was the intention of the testator that his gift should enable the school directors to do what they were permitted, but not required, to do by a certain statute prescribing the duties and powers of school directors, in view of the fact that the testator was doubtless familiar with such statute, and it was further held that, in view of such construction of the will, the bequest did not fail on the ground that it was impossible to comply with the condition in the will as to the reduction of the tax rate.—In re Johns' Estate, 108 A. 593, 265 Pa. 311.

"Latent ambiguity"

In passing on the question as to the admissibility of evidence to assist in carrying out the intention of the testator as to the construction of a mortuary chapel in a cemetery,

Under some circumstances, extrinsic evidence is admissible to identify or ascertain the beneficiaries, as shown below in § 41.

All presumptions consistent with the language used are indulged to sustain a charitable gift, as shown above in § 6 a.

III. CHARITABLE PURPOSES

§ 12. In General

Broadly, a charitable use or purpose may, where neither law nor public policy forbids, be applied to almost anything tending to promote the well doing and well being of social man, but the use or purpose must be a public, as distinguished from a private, one, for the benefit of the public at large or of a portion thereof or for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons.

It is essential to a valid charitable gift that it be for a purpose recognized in law as charitable.⁶⁸ To constitute a charitable use or purpose, it must be a public as distinguished from a private one; it must be for the public use or benefit; and it must be for the benefit of the public at large, or of a portion thereof, or for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons.⁶⁹ However, as discussed in §§ 37-39 infra, this does not prevent the donor from seit was held that a "latent ambiguity" is one not appearing on the face of the words used, and not known to exist until the words are brought in contact with the collateral facts.—Carroll v. Cave Hill Cemetery Co., supra.

11 C.J. p 313 note 86.

A bequest not otherwise charitable is not rendered so because it is to persons who follow an employment which is noble and appealing.—In re Kennedy's Estate, 269 N.Y.S. 136, 139, 240 App.Div. 20, 23, affirmed 191 N.E. 629, 264 N.Y. 691.—In re Carpenter's Estate, 297 N.Y.S. 649, 163 Misc. 474.

Public charitable purpose

Trust was not open to criticism lecting some particular class of the public and limiting his benefaction to that class, provided the class is composed of an indefinite number of persons rather than certain designated and named individuals. In determining whether a gift is charitable, the courts look to the nature and purpose of the gift, rather than to the donor's motives in making it;⁷⁰ and hence, where the nature of the gift is such that it must be deemed to be for a public purpose, the fact that there is also a private motive in making it does not deprive the gift of its public character so as to render it noncharitable.⁷¹ It is immaterial whether or not the purpose is called charitable in the gift itself if it is so described as to show that it is charitable in its nature.⁷² It constitutes no reason for holding a gift void as a charity that it is made for a purpose for which other and perhaps ample provision has been made by law.⁷³

Charitable uses take such varied forms that a specific enumeration of the classes or objects is necessarily defective,⁷⁴ and they cannot be limited by any narrow and stated formula.⁷⁵ The preamble of the statute of 43 Elizabeth enumerates many specific charitable purposes;⁷⁶ but not only in jurisdictions where the statute is or has been in force or is adopted or recognized as part of the law of those jurisdictions but also in jurisdictions where it is not so adopted or recognized but is considered simply as persuasive authority or as an aid in determining what constitutes a charity, many purposes are deemed to be charitable which are not specifically named in the statute but are within its spirit and reason.⁷⁷ Although the relief of the poor, that it authorized use of estate for public purpose, as distinguished from public charitable purpose.—Howard v. Howard, 116 N.E. 937, 227 Mass. 395.

Ultimate results

Consideration is to be given to the ultimate results to be accomplished by the creation of the trust, and not the incidental benefits that may accrue to certain purposes.—City Bank Farmers Trust Co. v. Bennett, 287 N.Y.S. 784, 159 Misc. 779.

Exclusiveness of application or a benefit to them in some way, is in its popular sense a necessary ingredient in a charity, this is not so in the view of the law,⁷⁸ and hence a gift to a public use is not unlawful as a charity because it is not limited to the purpose of relieving the sick or poverty stricken,⁷⁹ or because it extends to the rich as well as to the poor.⁸⁰ A charitable use, where neither law nor public policy forbids, may be applied to almost anything that tends to promote the well-doing and well-being of social man.⁸¹ In its legal sense, charity comprises four principal divisions: (1) Trusts for the relief of poverty and distress; (2) trusts for the advancement of education; (3) trusts for the advancement of religion; and (4) trusts for other purposes beneficial to the community not falling under any of the preceding heads.⁸²

While the term "benevolent" includes matters which are charitable, it is a broader term and includes matters which are not charitable. Accordingly, there is a distinction between benevolent purposes and charitable purposes, except where the two terms are obviously used synonymously,⁸³ or where the distinction has been done away with by statute.⁸⁴

Construction. If the terms of the gift are capable of two constructions, one of which would devote it to a charitable purpose and the other to possible private gain, that construction which is fairly within the law and sustains the trust should be preferred.⁸⁵

A gift for the maintenance of a churchyard or a burial ground in connection with a church or religious society, or of a public burial ground, or of a burial ground for all persons of a certain race, class, or neighborhood, is one for a charitable use.⁹⁰ In the absence of statute, a trust for the care and upkeep of a private burial lot, or particular graves, tombs, or monuments, when not intended for a public benefit, is not valid as a charitable gift,⁹¹ although a trust of this kind may be sustained as a private trust, as shown in the C.J.S. title Trusts § 25, also 65 C.J. p 236 note 72, provided it does not violate the rule against perpetuities. In some states, trusts for the care and upkeep of private burial lots are authorized by statute,⁹² and while in a few of such states a trust so created is characterized as a statutory trust in contradistinction to a charitable trust,⁹³ in other states the statutes are so worded and construed that the trust is deemed a charitable one.⁹⁴ An unlimited bequest to a corporation authorized to acquire property by bequest or devise and incorporated to cremate the dead in the quickest, best, and most economical manner appears to be charitable and valid.⁹⁵

Cemetery conducted for profit

(1) While a cemetery may be conducted for profit or in some manner that precludes it from being considered as charitable in nature, like a hospital it may be conducted in such a manner as to make it charitable in nature, as where it is conducted by a charitable religious organization and as one of the religious objects of the organization and for the benefit of those of the faith which the organization professes.—In re Lubin's Estate, 199 P. 15, 16, 186 Cal. 326.

(2) It is at least doubtful whether the cemetery of a burial society whose articles of association contemplate the burial there of its own members only, but which has long permitted the interment of other inhabitants of the community on the payment of certain fees, not from a charitable motive but as a source of private profit, can in the absence of express statute be regarded as held for a public charitable use.—Hopkins v. Grimshaw, D.C., 17 S.Ct. 401, 165 U.S. 342, 41 L.Ed. 739.

Excess over funeral expenses for charitable purpose

The purchase of a family plot and the erection of a headstone thereon are properly part of decedent's funeral expenses to the extent of an amount reasonable for decedent's burial and headstone, and the balance, if any, expended therefor pursuant to the will is deemed an expenditure for a charitable purpose.—In re McArdle's Will, 264 N.Y.S. 764, 147 Misc. 876.

Gifts for the advancement of learning, science, and the useful arts generally, either with or without particular reference to the poor, are regarded as charitable.

Gifts for schools and scholars are expressly mentioned in the statute of Elizabeth, and gifts for the advancement of learning, science, and the useful arts generally, either with or without particular reference to the poor, are regarded as charities.¹ Except where a gift is improperly conditioned or restricted, as discussed later in this section, the courts will generally sustain all gifts for educational purposes,² since such gifts have been regarded by the courts of this country with special favor.³ Included as valid charitable gifts are not only those for the support of the public or free schools, but also those for the founding, establishment, support, and maintenance of other schools or institutions of learning which are not strictly private,⁴ even though they are under the control of a particular church or religious denomination.⁵ Although, as stated in § 2, an institution of learning is or is not charitable, according as to whether it is carried on for public benefit or for private gain, yet the fact that the instruction furnished is not gratuitous, or that fees are charged, does not prevent a gift to the institution from being a charitable one.⁶ The validity of a gift for educational purposes is not affected by the fact that the state has provided for the maintenance of schools for all children of school age within the territory intended to be benefited.⁷ In the case of a gift to or for a school, it is no objection to its validity that the school exists for the benefit of a restricted class of persons,⁸ nor does the fact that a preference is given to relatives of the donor take from the gift the character of a charity.⁹ Neither does the fact that a preference is given to children of parents connected with a particular religious denomination destroy the character of the gift as a public charity.¹⁰ However, a devise or bequest for the purpose of educating a certain relative of the testator,¹¹ or the descendants of certain persons named,¹² is not valid as a charitable use.

b. General or Limited, Restricted or Conditional, Purpose

Charitable gifts may be limited and restricted to a particular educational purpose or use.

A valid charitable gift may be made for a general educational purpose or purposes, or it may be limited and restricted to a particular purpose or use.¹³ Accordingly, a gift for the endowment of a college "free from all sectional or political influence,"¹⁴ or for the higher education of young people in a certain locality,¹⁵ or for a school to be "taught by a female or females, wherein no book of instruction is to be used to teach except spelling books and the Bible,"¹⁶ is a valid charity. The gift may also be properly intended for the providing of school-books,¹⁷ the establishment of professorships, fellowships, scholarships, or the maintenance of teachers,¹⁸ or the payment of annuities to retired teachers,¹⁹ to establish a loan fund, for indigent students,²⁰ to found a literary fund,²¹ or to establish a memorial in a school.²² Since the education provided for need not be general education, a gift is not without the bounds of charity because the training contemplated thereby may include special or specific education.²³ Thus, a gift for the advancement of medical science,²⁴ naval architecture,²⁵ marine engineering,²⁶ or agricultural knowledge,²⁷ for promotion of research in agricultural chemistry,²⁸ for art education, appreciation, and production,²⁹ for education in the principles of socialism,³⁰ for educating young persons in the domestic and useful acts,³¹ or for the education of young men for the christian ministry,³² is a valid charitable gift. A gift to a school does not cease to be for charitable uses, because religious instruction is combined in such school with that of a literary and scientific character.³³ A gift for the purpose of providing manual training or training in the trades is valid,³⁴ although manual training has been adopted in the public schools.³⁵

Gifts other than to schools and colleges. Education comprehends in its broadest significance the acquisition of all knowledge tending to develop and train the individual and when used in this sense is not limited to the years of adolescence or to instruction in the schools.³⁶ Gifts for the promotion of science, learning, and useful knowledge by other means than schools or colleges, or for the direct instruction of pupils or students, are equally public and charitable.³⁷ A gift for the purpose of establishing or supporting a public library is a charitable gift,³⁸ even where a town is authorized to appropriate money therefor.³⁹ Likewise, gifts are charitable and valid when they are made for the purpose of establishing or supporting a geographical, agricultural, or historical society,⁴⁰ a literary society,⁴¹ an organization devoted to scientific research for the betterment of man,⁴² public museums,⁴³ an in-

Maintenance charges consistent

Because a trust created by will, giving the residue for establishing a public hospital for treatment of white and colored patients, is a charitable trust, it does not necessarily follow that the benefits of the institution are to be enjoyed gratuitously; absence of a provision for maintenance is inconsistent with a purpose that treatment be free, and consistent with self-support.—Harof captives, prisoners, or slaves,⁵⁶ to protect citizens of African descent in their civil rights and to prevent discrimination against them,⁵⁷ or for the civilization and improvement of certain Indian tribes,⁵⁸ are generally considered to be for charitable purposes.

Gift to or for poor relations. A gift to poor relations or for their benefit is a private gift, although it would prevent their becoming a public charge,⁵⁹ but a gift may constitute a public charity and not a private trust, where it provides for the poor generally and gives a preference to relatives of the donor.⁶⁰ It has been held, however, that at common law dispositions in favor of poor relations are to be ranked among charitable uses whenever they seem to have been treated as such by the testator.⁶¹

It is a general rule that a gift for a religious purpose is one for a charitable purpose;⁶² and in determining the validity of a charity, there is no distinction between the promotion of "piety" and of "religion," the two words being synonymous,⁶³ although in a few jurisdictions, as discussed in § 18, the courts use the term "pious uses" in relation to gifts of this character. As the term "church" imports an organization for religious purposes, a gift to a church or a church society by name, without declaration or restriction as to the use to be made of the subject matter of the gift, must be deemed to be a gift for the promotion of the purposes for which the church was organized and, therefore, to be a gift for a charitable purpose and to be valid if the other elements of a valid charitable gift exist.⁶⁴ Provided the tenets of the particular sect are not adverse to all religion, or subversive to all morality, the fact that a gift which is otherwise valid as being for a religious purpose is intended to aid or benefit a particular sect or denom-

Annuity gifts sustained.

The gift to the Trinity Episcopal Church of one hundred fifty dollars per annum for a period of ten years, and to the Men's Club of Trinity Parish of one hundred dollars per ination, or to promote the spread of its doctrines, does not prevent it from being for a charitable purpose.⁶⁵ However, where a general charitable intent is shown to be lacking by the specific provisions of the grant, the gift will be held void.⁶⁶

§ 18. — Particular Religious Purposes

Gifts for the furtherance of purposes for which a church or religious organization exists, such as for the aid of its ministry, the erection and maintenance of church buildings, the aid of Sunday schools or missionaries, the circulation of religious literature, or for the saying of masses, are in general deemed charitable.

From ancient times a pious use has been considered a charitable use.⁶⁷ As is the case in jurisdictions where the courts look at such gifts as being for "religious" purposes, as shown in § 17, so in jurisdictions where the courts use the term "pious" uses or purposes, a gift to a church generally is deemed to be made for the promotion of the pious purposes for which the church exists and consequently to be a gift for a pious purpose.⁶⁸ Gifts to a priest or minister in his public office for use by him for religious purposes are charitable.⁶⁹

Gifts are not prohibited as superstitious if they are for the observance of any ceremonial, the efficacy of which is recognized by the church of which the donor is a member, as no religious observances can be deemed, as a matter of law, superstitious.⁷⁰ Accordingly, gifts for the saying of masses are generally considered for a charitable purpose and hence are valid as to purpose,⁷¹ but in other jurisdictions a gift for the saying of masses for the repose of the annum for a period of five years, may be sustained as gifts in the nature of an annuity, or trust in favor of charity.—In re Allen's Will, 181 N.Y.S. 398, 111 Misc. 93, affirmed 194 N.Y.S. 913.

Use "for" society

Bequest of money to be used "for" church society implied use for purpose of society, and therefore bequest was wholly charitable, even though there was no restriction as to use of fund.—Bates v. Schillinger, 145 A. 395, 128 Me. 14.

Gift to prepare minister

Owner of property may give it on trust to maintain and inculcate any doctrine of Christianity or to promote and extend any particular Christian denomination by training of ministers to preach its tenets, such gift constituting a charity, which will be upheld and protected.—Trustees of Andover Theological Seminary v. Visitors of Theological Inst. in Phillips Academy in Andover, 148 N.E. 900, 253 Mass. 256.

66. Charitable intent lacking

Under a will devising residence to niece for life and thereafter to church, conditioned on family portraits being kept in place, it was held that no general charitable intent was indicated.—Ward v. Worthington, 162 N.E. 714, 28 Ohio App. 325.

Admissibility of evidence

On the issue as to whether gifts for masses to be said for the repose of the souls of the testator and others are gifts for charitable uses, evidence as to the character and objects of the ceremonial of the mass according to the doctrine of the Roman Catholic church and also as to the rule of the church as to the offerings for masses is admissible.—In re Hamilton's Estate, 186 P. 587, 181 Cal. 758.

soul of a deceased person is not considered a charity, in that it is not for a general religious purpose or for the benefit of the public or any considerable portion thereof.⁷²

Aid of ministry. While the rule is otherwise as to a personal gift to or for a minister,⁷³ gifts for a minister or ministers as such, or for the maintenance of preaching, are for a valid charitable purpose.⁷⁴ Likewise, a gift for the support of a sermon or a course of sermons is one for a charitable purpose.⁷⁵ A devise to a religious group to be used for the support of old and needy ministers of a certain denomination is for a charitable purpose.⁷⁶

Erection and maintenance of church property. Gifts for charitable purposes include gifts for the erection, maintenance, and repair of church buildings, and the conveyance of land for the purpose of furnishing a site therefor.⁷⁷ More specifically, gifts for erecting, maintaining, or keeping in repair any part of a church edifice, such as a chancel or spire,⁷⁸ the pulpit,⁷⁹ a window or monument therein,⁸⁰ a grotto,⁸¹ or memorial chapels,⁸² are charitable, as is also a gift of land or of a building, or for the purchase, maintenance, or repair of a building, for a parsonage.⁸³ It is no objection to the execution of a gift for the erection of a place of worship that a building is already provided for such religious society and is held by other trustees.⁸⁴

Missionary purposes. The courts have frequently held that gifts to home or foreign missions, or to missionary societies, or for missionary purposes, are for a charitable purpose.⁸⁵

Bequest to archbishop

Where a bequest is left to an archbishop, with a request that masses be said in particular churches within his jurisdiction, the obligation of the archbishop is one as to disposition and use of the money and such bequest is for a religious purpose. Accordingly a will, giving the residue of testator's estate to "W., Archbishop of Dublin, Ireland, and I request that masses be offered for the repose of my soul," in certain named churches in Dublin, created a precatory trust.—In re Hamilton's Estate, supra.

Gift to a church society, which fits up missionary boxes, containing clothing and other useful articles for the families of missionaries, is for a charitable purpose.—Brinsmade v. Beach, 119 A. 233, 98 Conn. 322.

In Virginia, the provisions of Code 1919 § 587, validating gifts for educational purposes "and every gift, grant, devise or bequest hereafter made for charitable purposes," do not apply to gifts for religious purposes, and hence cannot validate bequest of money to be administered by named pastor, who should pay interest drawn by money to "the Methodist Church South for missionary work where he thinks it will do the greatest good."—Moore v. Perkins, 192 S.E. 806.

Sunday school purposes. Gifts for Sunday school purposes are charitable in nature;⁸⁶ but a gift for the purpose of making Christmas presents to the scholars of a certain Sunday school has been held not a charitable gift.⁸⁷

Circulation of religious literature. Gifts for the printing, circulation, and distribution of bibles or other religious literature are for a charitable purpose,⁸⁸ although it has also been held that a gift for the distribution of bibles which does not exclude the possibility of a distribution for profit is not for a charitable purpose.⁸⁹

Publication of newspaper. A gift to the board of directors of the First Church of Christ Scientist in Boston, Massachusetts, to be used in the interest of the Christian Science Monitor, an international newspaper, has been held to be for a charitable purpose.⁹⁰

Maintenance of Young Men's Christian Association. The object of a gift is a charitable one in a legal sense when it is for the purpose of assisting in the formation and maintenance of a young men's christian association.⁹¹

§ 19. Other Purposes

In addition to the purposes already discussed, many others widely variant in character but alike in the aim of betterment to mankind have been held to be charitable.

Various gifts, in addition to those discussed in the preceding sections, have been held to fall within the requirements, as already set forth in § 12, of gifts for charitable purposes. Accordingly, gifts for the promotion of peace,⁹² for the promotion of temperance by suppressing the liquor traffic,⁹³ to provide for the mental, moral, and physical well-being of war veterans,⁹⁴ for a fire department relief association,⁹⁵ for the relief of flood sufferers,⁹⁶ for Memorial Day purposes,⁹⁷ for the improvement of the cultivation of vegetables and the extension of their use,⁹⁸ a grant of land to be used for holding agricultural exhibition fairs and other legitimate amusements,⁹⁹ or a gift seeking the honest enforcement of municipal contracts and to investigate city affairs¹ has been held to be for charitable purposes. Also a gift is for a charitable purpose when it is intended to relieve the suffering or to increase the comfort and enjoyment of animals,² even though there is a possibility that the means provided for the carrying out of the gift may benefit not only animals useful to man but also animals or birds not useful to him.³ A gift to promote improvements in the structure and methods of government with a view to encourage efficiency and popu-

"Humane purpose" distinguished

Under a statute providing that gifts for any charitable or humane purpose are valid, "there is a clear distinction between a 'charity' and a 'humane purpose.' The latter may be sustained where the former would fail. Charity extends to every one of a class, while it is a humane purpose which moves a person to take care of or feed a single hungry person, bird, or dog."—Willett v. Willett, 247 S.W. 739, 740, 197 Ky. 663, 31 A.L.R. 426.

lar control of government creates a valid charitable trust for the benefit and welfare of the public;⁴ and such gift is not invalid because it contemplates the procuring of such changes in existing laws as the donor deems beneficial to the people in general, or the class for whose benefit the trust is created.⁵ A gift to a civilized and friendly nation for a national purpose is a valid charity.⁶

On the other hand, gifts for the benefit of a Masonic lodge,⁷ for keeping the testator's clock in repair at his home,⁸ for the development of an Irish Republic,⁹ for promoting a universal divorce law among the states,¹⁰ for the benefit of a saving's bank which is a private corporation,¹¹ for a public waterworks,¹² for helping a world's fair company out of financial difficulty,¹³ for a brass band to march to the testator's grave on holidays and "other proper occasions" and play funeral marches,¹⁴

§ 20. Certainty of Purpose

It is essential to a valid gift for a charitable use that the instrument creating the gift point out the purpose with reasonable definiteness and certainty, or provide a means for its determination.

Among other things, it is essential to a valid gift for a charitable use, not only that the gift be for a purpose recognized in law as charitable, as already discussed in §§ 12-19, but that the instrument creating the gift point out such purpose¹⁶ with reasonable definiteness and certainty.¹⁷ This rule is especially declared by statute in some states.¹⁸ As to the degree of certainty and definiteness required, it is necessary and sufficient that the donor designate his charitable purpose with sufficient definiteness and certainty to enable it to be executed or carried out,¹⁹ and the gift will be sus-

Trust held valid

A trust for such public charitable jurisdictions the rule is otherwise.²⁶ A gift by will may be upheld, although the testator refers to some past or intended declaration of the particular charity, which declaration is not made or cannot be found, and although the selection of the objects of the charity and the mode of application are left to the discretion of trustees, and even though the trustees refuse the gift, or die, or their appointment is revoked in the testator's lifetime, causing a lapse of the bequest at law.²⁷ Where, for instance, a will shows that a plan for carrying out the testator's object was afterward to be developed and left with his executor, a failure so to do will not by the common law override his general charitable intent and render the provision void, at least where he has vested others with authority to work out and put in operation the details necessary to make his idea of practical use to those he intended to benefit.²⁸ Even a testamentary gift in remainder to such charities as shall be deemed most useful by the legal representative of the tenant for life is a valid charity.²⁹

To constitute a charitable trust, the trustee's discretion must be confined to charitable objects,³⁰

and such discretion can never be so wide and indefinite that the trustee's conscience cannot be held to the carrying out of some purpose by a court of equity.³¹

A gift to an unincorporated association³² or to an incorporated institution, both founded and conducted as a charity, is presumed to be for a charitable purpose without it being expressly so stated.³³

Where the court construes the instrument in question to create an absolute unqualified gift rather than a trust, any uncertainty as to the purpose or object of the gift becomes immaterial.³⁴

§ 21. — Particular Classes of Gifts

The class of gift involved does not affect the question of certainty of a charitable purpose.

It would seem that the particular class of gift involved would in no way affect or control the question of certainty and definiteness of purpose.³⁵

In applying the general rules already stated in the preceding section, the courts have held some gifts for the relief of poverty and distress to be sufficiently definite and certain as to purpose,³⁶ and purposes as shall meet the trustees' "approval under the conditions in which they may be called to act" is not invalid as a scheme of distribution later to be disclosed.—Kirwin v. Attorney General, 175 N.E. 164, 275 Mass. 34.

others to be void on account of uncertainty.³⁷

Promotion of religion. While some instruments intended to create charitable gifts for religious purposes have been held insufficient to accomplish that end on account of vagueness and uncertainty in the language employed to designate the purpose,³⁸ yet the courts have held sufficiently definite and certain as to purpose many instruments intended to create a charitable gift for religious purposes, some of them containing expressions as general as those employed in cases where the gifts were held void for uncertainty;³⁹ but in many of these cases a discretion was committed to the trustees, and thus a means was provided for making the purpose more definite and certain.⁴⁰

Promotion of education. It has been held that a gift for the promotion of education should indicate the nature and extent of the education intended;⁴¹

but that appears not to be the prevailing view,⁴² especially when the mode of application is left to the discretion of trustees,⁴³ or when education at a particular institution or place is mentioned.⁴⁴ Some gifts for educational purposes have been held void for indefiniteness and uncertainty of purpose,⁴⁵ and many have been held sufficiently definite and certain as to purpose.⁴⁶

§ 22. Commingling Charitable and Noncharitable Purposes

Generally, where charitable purposes are mingled with other purposes which are noncharitable, the whole gift fails as a charity for uncertainty.

certainty.⁴⁷ A class of cases exists, however, where there is a general overriding trust for charitable purposes, but some of the particular purposes to which the fund may be applied are not strictly charitable, or one of two alternative modes of application is invalid in law. In such cases the court will give effect to the general charitable trust, but the trustees are restricted from applying the fund to the purposes or in the manner which is objectionable.⁴⁸ When so restrained, that part of the fund as to which an invalid trust is created belongs to the donor.⁴⁹ In case the trusts were created by will, and an ascertainable portion of a fund or an estate was given on a void trust and the residue on a good charitable trust, the residue has the benefit of the failure of the prior trust.⁵⁰ A bequest "to charitable and deserving objects" has been held good as a charity.⁵¹

§ 23. Commingling Two or More Charitable Purposes

Two or more charitable purposes may legally be combined in a single gift.

On the question of want of certainty or definiteness the distinction between the purposes of any lawful trusts is not part of the ratio decidendi.⁵² Two or more charitable purposes may legally be combined in a single gift. Accordingly, a bequest to be used in the erection and maintenance of a building to be used jointly for a public library and a Young Men's Christian Association is valid as a charity.⁵³ A gift to a town for the relief of its poor or for their education is not too vague,⁵⁴ nor is a gift to a city for "any outstanding purpose" humanitarian or artistic void as too vague, uncertain, or indefinite.⁵⁵

IV. TRUSTEES

§ 24. Appointment of, or Provision for, by Donor

In the creation of a charitable trust there must be a separation of the legal estate from the beneficial enjoyment of the same; and where qualifications are prescribed with respect to trustees, the eligibility of a person depends on the possession of such qualifications.

In the creation of a charitable trust, there must be a separation of the legal estate from the beneficial enjoyment of the same, indicated by words of the donor, in order to prevent an extinguishment of the trust by a merger of the equitable and legal estate;⁵⁶ and a bequest of money or property for a stated purpose will fail where there is no designation of a donee of the legal title or of the beneficiaries of the equitable interest, as there is no one on whom the duty is imposed, or to whom the power is granted, to effectuate such purpose.⁵⁷ However, as shown infra § 27, ordinarily the mere failure to appoint a trustee will not cause the trust to fail as equity may appoint a trustee.

Qualifications. Where certain qualifications are prescribed by the donor with regard to trustees, the eligibility of a person depends on the possession of such qualifications.⁵⁸

Status. A self-perpetuating board of trustees for an institution donated to a town is not a corporation or private instrumentality, but has the status of committees and boards selected by the municipality for definite purposes;⁵⁹ and where money or property is given to a municipal corporation on a charitable trust, a provision that the management thereof shall be in a board of trustees does not necessarily divest the municipality of the legal title and vest it in the trustees, but such a gift may be construed to make the municipality the technical trustee holding the legal title, and the so-called trustees merely an agency intrusted with the duty of management.⁶⁰

§ 25. — Certainty and Construction

Where it can be made clear who is intended, either from the context of the instrument of gift or by evidence as to the surrounding circumstances, the person or institution identified as the one intended is entitled to take.

Where, from the context of the instrument of gift, or by parol evidence as to the surrounding circumstances, it can be made clear who is intended, a charitable gift is not invalid because the trustee or the donee is erroneously or uncertainly designated, but on the contrary the person or the institution identified as the one intended is entitled to take.⁶¹ It is not necessary to the valid appointment of a trustee of a charitable trust that he shall

Agreed statement of facts

On application for appointment of a trustee to administer testator's charitable bequests, agreed statement of facts made solely to show surrounding circumstances could be used to establish charitable nature of bequests where mere identification of legatee characterized the legacies as charitable.—Eccles v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co., 98 A. 129, 90 Conn. 592.

Division between institutions

In one case, where there was doubt as to which of two institutions was intended, the bequest was equally divided between them.—East Carolina Diocese v. North Carolina Diocese, 9 S.E. 310, 102 N.C. 442.

Insufficient designation

Where a bequest was made to the capital of particular funds, a direction to the executor to pay the property over to the lawful custodian of such funds has been held insufficient as a designation of the donees under a charitable trust.—Robinson v. Crutcher, 209 S.W. 104, 277 Mo. 1.

Particular applications of rule

(1) The Women's Missionary Society of the Congregational Church at Stratford may take under a bequest to the Ladies Society of Stratford where there was no such society and the testatrix was a member and officer of the missionary society.—Brinsmade v. Beach, 119 A. 233, 98 Conn. 322.

(2) A bequest to the "Old People's Home of R." was held to be intended for the J. H. Palmeter's Old Ladies' Home.—In re Scott's Will, 195 N.W. 843, 131 Wis. 607.

(3) A devise to the "Cleveland Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, Ohio, an orphan asylum for Jewish orphans," was a devise to the Cleveland Jewish Orphan Asylum, where such orphanage was the only Jewish orphan asylum in Cleveland, which fact was known to testator, who at time of making will did not know exact name thereof.—Hughes v. Cleveland Jewish Orphan Asylum, 212 S.W. 428, 184 Ky. 461.

(4) A devise to an institution has been construed as a devise to the trustees maintaining such institution.—In re McDole's Estate, 10 P. 2d 75, 215 Cal. 323.

(5) A bequest "to the trustees" of an institution is a bequest to, and for the benefit of the institution, although those having charge of it are called managers in the charter. N.J.—Van Wagenen v. Baldwin, 7 N.J.Eq. 211.

be specified by name, or that the word "trustee" shall be used,⁶² provided it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the duties to be performed are such as are properly to be performed by one who is a trustee, and that the individual or the corporation is designated with sufficient precision to leave no doubt as to the identity;⁶³ and the designation of the trustees by their official character is equivalent to naming them by their proper names.⁶⁴

Thus, it has been held that a bequest to a church, unable to take, is not a bequest to a corporation managing the church edifice, nor to the corporation in whose name the property of such church was held;⁶⁵ that a bequest to the consistory of a church is in effect a bequest to the corporation itself, and the church members are to have the benefit of the bequest as controlled by the consistory;⁶⁶ that a bequest for building a Catholic convent in a certain town is a gift in trust to persons vested with power under the church laws to direct as to the erection of such buildings;⁶⁷ and that a grant to a church in a certain town vests title not in the congregation,⁶⁸ but in the pastor and his successors.⁶⁹

erect a church thereon and the church is erected, such persons are trustees of the property for the use of the congregation;⁷⁰ and a fund donated by members of the public for a charitable purpose, in response to an appeal therefor, has been held received by the one to whom the donations were sent as a trustee for the purposes as fixed by such appeal.⁷¹

Although it has been held that a bequest to a church of a particular denomination, of which the testator's wife might be a member when she died, belongs to the congregation of which she is a member, and not to the denomination generally,⁷² it has also been held that when a charity is given to a subordinate object or body of a charitable religious institution, the trust vests in the main society in aid of which it is granted,⁷³ and this rule has been applied when the bequest is to an unincorporated branch or department of a corporation;⁷⁴ but the gift must appear to be in case of the corporation to entitle it to take.⁷⁵

In the notes below will be found additional cases in which the instrument donating the property was construed with reference to the person entitled to act as trustee.⁷⁶

§ 26. — Provision for Appointment of New Trustee

The donor may not only name the trustees but may also determine the manner in which their colleagues or successors may be appointed.

A person creating a charitable trust may not only name the trustees who shall execute the trust but may also determine the manner in which their colleagues or successors shall be appointed,⁷⁷ as by conferring this power upon the trustees named by him;⁷⁸ and where the creator of the trust has provided a method for the filling of vacancies, this method will be carried out whenever possible.⁷⁹ Where the trust instrument provided for the perpetuation of the trustees, the invocation of the court's powers to appoint trustees because none were chosen in accordance with such provisions has been held not to abrogate them or impose permanently on the court the duty to appoint trustees.⁸⁰

Ordinarily, a court of equity will not allow a gift for charitable uses, otherwise valid, to fail for want of a trustee, but will itself administer the trust or appoint a trustee to administer it.

Duty to appoint trustee

Under some statutes, it has been held the duty of the court to see that a trust for religious or charitable corporations does not fail for want of a trustee.—Dwyer v. Leonard, 124 A. 28, 100 Conn. 513—Eccles v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co., 98 A. 129, 90 Conn. 592.

No appropriate trustees available

A trust for local religious society would not fail even if no appropriate trustees were available possessing the qualifications specified.—Attorney General v. Armstrong, 120 N.E. 678, 231 Mass. 196.

Where title vests in court

Code Civ.Proc. § 2638, empowering the surrogate's court to appoint successive trustees, does not authorize it to appoint a trustee, where the legal title to the trust estate, constituting a charity, vests in the supreme court.—In re Welch, 172 N.Y.S. 349, 105 Misc. 27.

Court as trustee

Under Rev.St.1909 § 3746, a county court may act as a trustee of a charitable trust.—Robinson v. Crutcher, 209 S.W. 104, 277 Mo. 1.

Fledings held appropriate

Pleading in suit to determine conflicting claims of trustees not demurrable, and not excepted to, was held to invoke court's power to appoint new trustees.—Wells v. Richardson, Tex.Civ.App., 280 S.W. 608.

Charity not extinguished

In absence of provision in deed of trust, and where trustees had management and control of property for religious society, court's appointment of board of trustees did not extinguish charity.—Crawford v. Nies, 113 N.E. 408, 224 Mass. 474. Administration by the court see infra § 49.

Voluntary association

Although the gift to a charitable use is to a voluntary association or an unincorporated society, which is uncertain, indefinite, and fluctuating in its membership, the court will, nevertheless, at least in some jurisdictions, uphold it and will appoint a trustee to take and to administer the fund according to the terms of the grant.

In view of Rev.St.1909 § 583, a court of equity, in order to sustain a trust in a will cannot go to the extent of incorporating into the will the names of the donees who would take legal title to the funds bequeathed. Where testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to the capital of a county school fund, the names of the judges of the county court could not be inserted as custodians of the property, a charitable trust not having been sufficiently created to make applicable the provisions of Rev.St.1909 § 3747.—Robinson v. part of, some or all of the original trustees.⁸⁹ While the rule has been applied even where the person making the gift failed to appoint a trustee or to make provision for the appointment of one,⁹⁰ there is some authority to the contrary.⁹¹

However, the rule is not applicable where the gift is to charity generally and no trustee was appointed by the testator.⁹² Also, the rule has been held not applicable where discretion of a personal nature is reposed in the trustee, inasmuch as the means of certainty as to the execution of the donor's wishes are lost by his death;⁹³ nor will the rule be applied where the gift is so uncertain that it cannot be executed and consequently cannot be upheld as a charity unless the testator has appointed, or provided for the appointment of, a trustee and has clothed him with a discretion, the exercise of which will relieve the gift of uncertainty, and the testator has not done this;⁹⁴ but where it does not expressly or impliedly appear that the donor limited the execution of the trust to the discretion of the named trustees, the court will appoint a trustee to apply the property or funds to the objects and in such a manner as will effectuate the intention of the donor,⁹⁵ and in some jurisdictions, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, the trust does not fail or become inoperative by reason of a failure of the trustee to exercise the discretion conferred upon him, as the court may appoint a trustee to exercise such discretion.⁹⁶

Whom court should appoint. In appointing a trustee of a charitable trust, it is the duty of the court not to appoint one who is in hostility either to the purpose or to the beneficiaries of the gift.⁹⁷ The executor of a will will be permitted to act as trustee if the testator manifested an intention that he should so act.⁹⁸

A special statute declaring that the donor's oldest lineal male descendant shall be a trustee ex gratia was construed to mean the oldest male descendant in the oldest line of descent, akin to the doctrine of primogeniture.⁹⁹

If testator's bequest of income be for specific charitable object, and no trustee is appointed, court will nominate one.—While v. City of Newark, supra.

Comprehending all humanitarian objects

A bequest "to charity" made by testatrix who appointed no trustee created a valid charitable trust, since testatrix comprehended all the various religious, educational, benevolent, and humanitarian objects which the single word "charity" connotes, and the court would appoint a trustee to distribute the fund to various religious, educational, benevolent, and humanitarian objects.—In re Jordan's Estate, Pa., 197 A. 150.

Sufficient acceptance

"There can be no doubt about the certainty of the acceptance of the trustees of the Walker trust, for they signed, acknowledged and agreed to the contents of each of the three deeds. The essential Code sonable time where no time is specified;² and a statute providing that any person appointed as a trustee who shall neglect or refuse to give bond when required shall be considered as having declined the acceptance of the trust is applicable to charitable trusts.³ However, the failure to accept a gift within the time allowed by the instrument of donation has been held not to divest the title of the trustee where it had no knowledge of the gift during such time and it accepted the gift in the manner indicated shortly after acquiring knowledge thereof and the primary intention of the donor was to have the property go to such association;⁴ and where there are several gifts for the same object, any acts of the trustee indicating an intent to carry out the purpose for which the gifts were promised or made must be presumed to be in furtherance of each, unless otherwise shown.⁵

Where the trustee named is a town or city or other governmental body, it may, like other trustees, elect either to accept or to decline the trust;⁶ and it may make a conditional acceptance thereof, and then will be bound only by the terms of the devise and its own conditional acceptance.⁷ A formal acceptance is not necessary;⁸ and while its action in adopting an order or resolution accepting the gift is a sufficient acceptance in some cases,⁹ where the gift was subject to a condition precedent which has not been performed and a reasonable time therefor has elapsed, a mere resolution is not a sufficient acceptance.¹⁰

The trustee of a charity may so distinctly repudiate and disavow the trust, and hold the property so adversely as to acquire a complete legal and equitable title.¹¹

Renunciation. Although a trustee may generally renounce his trust, either expressly or impliedly,¹² element of certainty in this respect is beyond cavil."—Dingwell v. Seymour, 267 P. 327, 329, 91 Cal.App. 483.

Lapse of time

Lapse of time before acceptance of charitable bequest is not in itself significant in determining whether bequest has lapsed, whether one pursues right promptly or slowly within legal limits being of little importance so long as parties are in same position. A bequest in trust for establishment and support of city library to be named for testator did not lapse because of city's failure to express formally its acceptance of bequest and designate library by such name until nearly forty years after executor under will notified city of bequest, such designation of library not being condition precedent to bequest.—In re Mead's Estate, Wis., 277 N.W. 694, rehearing denied 279 N.W. 718.

Reasonable time

Where will bequeathed sum of money to charitable organization to be used in erection of new building, the money to be paid by executor when he was satisfied that building would be completed and that organization could finance it, the organization was required to give notice of election to accept the legacy within a reasonable time, which would elapse on running of statute of limitations.—In re DeBancourt's Estate, 272 N.W. 891, 279 Mich. 518, 110 A.L.R. 1346.

Acceptance not a rejection of prior bequest in trust

A city's acceptance of Carnegie gift for erection of public library building and placing of plaque bearing inscription, "This Library is a gift of Andrew Carnegie to the City," in building constructed, did not indicate its rejection of prior bequest in trust for establishment and support of public library to be named for testator. The fact that city ignored executor's letter, calling its attention to bequest in trust for establishment and support of city library and stating that city had not accepted bequest, that difficulties in carrying out will might be overcome by cooperation between city and residuary legatees, and that writer was ready to turn over fund according to directions of will, did not indicate city's renunciation of bequest, it being executor's duty under will to turn over fund to trustees for purchase of books, on city's acceptance of Carnegie gift for erection of library building.—In re Mead's Estate, Wis., 277 N.W. 694, rehearing denied 279 N.W. 718.

Rejection not shown

A city did not renounce charitable bequest of fund for establishment and support of public library therein by agreeing to do so in consideration of payment of lesser sum to city by testator's heir, such agreement being void as attempt to divert greater portion of trust fund to other purposes than those directed by will. The city, leasing building for library for five years after executors notified it of bequest in trust for establishment and support of public library in city, did not thereby renounce bequest.—In re Mead's Estate, supra.

Statutory limitations. Grants and gifts to charities are often subject to statutory limitations, as for instance that devises shall not be made to charitable institutions of more than a specified percentage of the testator's estate to the exclusion of his wife or descendants, see the C.J.S. title Wills § 110, also 68 C.J. page 546 note 49—page 564 note 99. Frequently the limitation is as to the amount which charitable institutions may take and hold, and a charter limiting a charitable corporation's property to a fixed sum has been held not modified by a general law authorizing such corporations to take property in trust without any expressed limit.²⁴ Whether a gift of property to a corporation is void as to any excess above its legal capacity to take, with a resulting trust as to such excess in favor of the heirs at law and next of kin, is a question on which there exists a conflict of authority. In some jurisdictions the rule is that such gifts are void as to the excess of the chartered capacity of the corporation to take,²⁵ while in others the gift has been held not void as to the excess, at least where not attacked by the state.²⁶ However, a bequest of an amount above the statutory limit may be made valid as to such total by a legislative increase after the testator's death;²⁷ but where a corporation may not take by devise unless expressly allowed, a statute enabling a corporation to take by devise has been held not to make valid a devise by a testator who died before such statute was in force,²⁸ although if the corporation had not the capacity to take at the testator's death, where the gift was not to take effect until the happening of a future event, at which time such incapacity had been removed, it was held that the corporation was entitled to the gift.²⁹

Who may question validity or right to take.

While the heirs of a donor are entitled to litigate the question whether a corporation has any power to acquire property in trust by devise,³⁰ there is a conflict of authority as to the right to attack a gift made to a corporation in excess of its charter or statutory limit. In some jurisdictions, the excess of a gift above the limit allowed may be impugned by the heirs and next of kin,³¹ while in other jurisdictions the rule is that such gifts can be attacked only by direct proceedings instituted in behalf of the state, and that they cannot be impeached in suits brought by the heirs at law and the next of kin;³² and, where by special act the state has waived its right by authorizing the creation of a particular corporation with enlarged capacity to enable it to accept and to hold a gift, the power of the corporation in that respect cannot be questioned in any manner.³³

§ 31. — Foreign Corporations

In the absence of a statute prohibiting a foreign corporation from holding property, and provided it is authorized to take by the law of its creation, a foreign corporation may take a gift or devise for charitable uses.

In the absence of a statute of the state in which the land is situated, which prohibits a foreign corporation from taking and holding land or real estate,³⁴ and provided it is authorized to take by the law of its creation,³⁵ a foreign corporation may take a gift, devise, or bequest for charitable uses; and although a foreign corporation may not be able to hold land or any interest in land, yet where the will directs a conversion of the realty into personality, a bequest of the proceeds to such a corporation will be upheld.³⁶

§ 32. — Corporations to Be Formed

A valid charitable gift may be made to a corporation to be formed after the death of the testator or after the delivery of a deed by the donor.

A valid charitable gift may be made to a corporation to be formed or created after the death of the testator in case of a will,³⁷ or after the delivery of the deed in case of a gift by deed.³⁸

The trustees of a charity may impliedly be authorized to apply for and accept an act of incorporation to carry out the testator's plans,³⁹ and the giving of power to the trustees to incorporate companies obviously does not indicate an intent to create an unincorporated association in the nature of a charitable foundation.⁴⁰ A direction that the executors shall "forthwith" obtain a "proper charter" makes them trustees of the trust fund until formal organization;⁴¹ and it is not necessary even that the contemplated corporation should be created, as a court of equity will uphold, protect, and enforce the gift for the charitable use,⁴² or at least will hold the fund until incorporation can be affected.⁴³ However, a legacy to a charitable institution described as in being cannot be treated as made to an institution to be created;⁴⁴ nor can an institution already established at the date of the will receive a bequest to such as "may be established";⁴⁵ and where a will prescribes certain rules and methods of government for a proposed institution not in being, it will not be sustained on the ground that without applying for a special act the institution may be incorporated under the general law which provides for a plan of incorporation different from that presented in the will.⁴⁶

§ 33. — Municipal Corporations and Other Governmental Bodies

Where the purposes of a trust are germane to the objects of a municipal corporation, it may be the trustee thereof.

A town or municipal corporation may be a trustee of a trust for charitable uses, where the purposes of the trust are germane to the objects of the corporation,⁴⁷ even though the object may be one which the municipality could not carry out at the public expense.⁴⁸ Indeed, the power to act as trustee is expressly conferred by some statutes, either on municipalities generally or on particular municipal corporations, or as to particular gifts,⁴⁹ which statutes have been held, in some cases, merely declaratory of the common law,⁵⁰ and it will not be assumed, as an impediment to accepting a trust, that such statutes will be abrogated in the future.⁵¹ However, a municipal corporation cannot take and hold property in trust for a purpose which is foreign or repugnant to the objects of its incorporation and in which it has no interest.⁵²

A charitable bequest in trust to a town is not void because the town, at the time the bequest is made, is incapable of taking the trust; and the fund may be ordered to be paid over to the town on it being enabled, by a subsequent act of the legislature, to administer the trust according to the will.⁵³ Where a city charter was repealed, and a new one granted, its area being enlarged, the city's title under a trust for charity was held not affected,⁵⁴ and if a town is afterward incorporated as a city, the identity of the municipal corporation is not lost, and the property held by the inhabitants of the town in trust passes to the city on the same trust, without the action of any court, and trustees cannot be appointed for such cause alone to manage the funds in place of the city.⁵⁵

Other governmental bodies held capable of acting as trustees of a charitable trust include counties,⁵⁶ townships,⁵⁷ and school districts or school boards.⁵⁸ In the absence of any restraining statute,⁵⁹ a gift to a state,⁶⁰ or to the United States,⁶¹ in trust to apply the fund in executing a lawful governmental function is valid; but if the state refuses to accept the trust no substitute trustee can succeed to its sovereign powers in administering it.⁶²

While, under statutes in some jurisdictions, a municipal corporation may be a trustee of a trust for perpetual care of a cemetery lot,⁷⁸ in other jurisdictions a devise to a municipal corporation for perpetual care of a lot in a city-owned cemetery has been held invalid as a trust for a private purpose,⁷⁹ the statute legalizing trusts for private burial lots not removing the incapacity of a municipal corporation to act as trustee of such a trust.⁸⁰ While it has been held that towns may hold property in trust for the support of religion within their limits,⁸¹ it has also been held that a municipal corporation cannot hold land in trust for religious or associated purposes;⁸² and school directors have no power to hold a spring for the use of the public.⁸³

§ 34. — Unincorporated Associations in General

Although in some jurisdictions an unincorporated association cannot be a trustee and a charitable gift made directly to it is void, in other jurisdictions such gifts are upheld, sometimes on the ground that the trust will not be allowed to fail for want of a trustee.

In accordance with the general rule that unincorporated associations generally are incapable, as such, of taking or holding either real or personal property, as stated in the title associations § 14, it is a rule in some jurisdictions that an unincorporated association or other voluntary unincorporated organization cannot take and hold property for the purposes of administering a charitable trust.⁸⁵

and that a charitable devise or bequest made directly to an unincorporated association is void for want of a person to take the legal title.⁸⁶ In these jurisdictions, a gift to an unincorporated association is construed to be a gift to the association as a body, and not to its members,⁸⁷ and hence cannot be taken by the individuals who compose the association as a gift to them.⁸⁸ Also, in these jurisdictions, a statute conferring quasi corporate capacity upon an unincorporated body to take land for purposes of public worship cannot be so extended as to confer power to take personal property.⁸⁹

However, in other jurisdictions, while it is sometimes held that an unincorporated association cannot be a trustee of a charitable trust,⁹⁰ the courts, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, uphold charitable gifts directly to an unincorporated association, society, or other voluntary body or organization,⁹¹ which exists solely for charitable purposes.⁹² Such gifts have been upheld either on the ground that the association has such an existence that it can be dealt with as trustee,⁹³ or that such a gift is one to the trustees of such an institution,⁹⁴ or on the ground that the trust will not be allowed to fail for want of a trustee, and that, if necessary, the court will appoint a trustee to administer the trust.⁹⁵

§ 35. — Effect of Subsequent Incorporation of Association

A charitable association which incorporates before the death of the testator or before the devise or legacy vests may take such gift although it could not take as an unincorporated association.

Where a charitable devise or bequest is void because made directly to an unincorporated association, as shown supra § 34, it is not made valid by the incorporation of such association after the death of the testator.⁹⁶ On the other hand, in a jurisdiction where a devise or bequest of a charitable nature to an unincorporated society is valid as shown supra § 34, the fact that the society thereafter becomes incorporated does not defeat its right to the devise or bequest.⁹⁷ Where an unincorporated association or society becomes incorporated before the death of the testator,⁹⁸ or after his death, but before the devise or legacy vests,⁹⁹ then it may take.

§ 36. — Trustees of or for Unincorporated Associations

A charitable gift to competent trustees for an unincorporated association is valid.

Regardless of whether in the particular jurisdiction an unincorporated body or association can itself act as trustee of a charitable trust, as discussed supra § 34, a charitable gift to competent trustees for such an unincorporated body or association is valid so far as any objection pertaining to trustees is concerned,¹ even though the trustees named are also the trustees or other officers of the society or association intended as beneficiaries.²

V. BENEFICIARIES

§ 37. Character and Capacity

- a. In general
- b. Unincorporated association

a. In General

A charitable trust must be for the benefit of the public or some portion of it. It may be limited to the members of a specified class, who may be limited in their abode to a certain locality or world-wide in extent. Ordinarily the beneficiary need not be in existence at the time of the donor's death, but a gift to a specific person or charitable organization and not to charity generally will fail where the beneficiary is nonexistent.

Although it is requisite to a public charity that it be for the benefit of the public or some portion thereof, as appears supra § 12, it is not necessary that a charity should be for the benefit of the entire public.³ Where the donor selects a class to be benefited, the gift is a valid charitable gift,⁴ provided the purpose is a charitable one, for a consideration of which see supra §§ 12-23, and the requirements as to certainty of designation of the class and of indefiniteness of the persons to be benefited, as set forth infra § 39, are complied with. The class to take as beneficiaries may be limited to one sex;⁵ to persons following a specified trade or occupation,⁶ or employed by a named corporation or governmental department;⁷ and in a number of jurisdictions to the members or dependents of members of some particular cult, sect, society, or religious or secular organization.⁸ However, it has been held that a bequest to an association whose benevolence is restricted to its members only is not a public charity; but if the recipient's benevolence extends to an indefinite number of nonmembers, it may be counted a public charity; and the mere fact that members of the association also may share in the general benevolence will not, ex necessitate, defeat the charity, so long as the gift is for the benefit of an "indefinite number of persons" in the legal sense of that term, that is to say, for the benefit of all persons belonging to the recognized charitable classes covered by the benevolence in question.⁹ Also, it has been held that a gift in trust for the members or dependents of members of a particular fraternal order is invalid on the ground that the classification made is arbitrary and artificial and for a class less than the whole number of the group for whom the state may or should provide,¹⁰ but a testamentary gift, made absolutely and not in trust, to a denominational hospital and the grand lodge of a fraternal order both being corporations, is valid.¹¹ A gift, the beneficiaries of which are to be selected from a very narrow class of mystics, has been held invalid.¹²

Ability of donee to take. Grants or donations for charitable uses are not rendered void or inoperative because of the inability of the beneficiary to take at the time of the grant.¹³

Existence of beneficiary. In most jurisdictions

the beneficiary need not be in existence at the time of the donor's death, provided there is a trustee appointed for the management and control of the trust property in the meantime, or with discretionary powers;¹⁴ and a gift for charitable uses may, under the direction of the instrument creating it, be administered and enforced by and through a corporation subsequently created for that purpose.¹⁵ In some states, however, the beneficiary of a charitable gift must be in existence at the time the gift takes effect, if at all;¹⁶ and, where a particular beneficiary is not in existence, other charitable institutions named in the same instrument do not take its share, where the instrument cannot be construed as placing them in a class.¹⁷ It has been stated that a purely charitable trust may be sustained where no beneficiaries are named.¹⁸ However, a charitable gift intended for a particular institution and not for charity generally lapses where the particular institution intended ceases to exist before the gift takes effect;¹⁹ and, if there is no such organization or person as the one referred to in a will, then a public charity intended by the testator will fail for want of any taker;²⁰ thus a bequest to a charitable instruction was changed to that of "Realschule" which were designed to fit pupils with higher education for merchants, bankers, postal and railroad employment. Bequest to "Protestant Orphan Asylum" of city of Speyer, Germany, failed, where one of two asylums in such city was Catholic orphanage and the other was municipal orphanage in which Catholics, Protestants, and Jews were sheltered.—Raue v. To person or organization never in existence

(1) A bequest to the "Reverend John Durappe" is void where the evidence shows that no person named "John Durappe" ever existed and there is not sufficient proof of a misnomer of some actual person.—Chelsea Nat. Bank v. Our Lady Star of the Sea, Atlantic City, N.J., 147 A. 470, 105 N.J.Eq. 286.

(2) A bequest in a will to an institution, where the evidence does not disclose the existence of any institution by the name mentioned, or satisfactorily refer to any corporate or other organization for which the bequest was intended, was properly held void.—Board of Foreign Missions of the General Synod of the corporation may lapse by termination of its existence before the death of the testator;²¹ but a gift to a charitable corporation, which, prior to the testator's death, consolidates with another charitable corporation, which consolidated corporation continues the general policy and methods of the corporation to which the legacy was bequeathed, is payable to the consolidated corporation;²² and a charitable corporation whose charter has been forfeited but is continued as a body corporate for a specified time for the purpose of prosecuting and defending actions is in existence, although dormant, and if its charter is revived during the time the corporation remains a body corporate it is entitled to funds left it by name.²³

Situs. The class to take as beneficiaries may be limited to persons living in a certain locality,²⁴ as a specified community,²⁵ city or town,²⁶ county,²⁷ state,²⁸ or foreign country.²⁹ However, the beneficiaries need not be confined to any particular locality;³⁰ they may be world-wide in scope,³¹ and a provision which comprehends a class without limitation as to its abode, where charity is the object, will be upheld in case there is a power resting in the trustee to select from the class named;³² nor is it necessary that a geographical limitation of the locality from which the beneficiaries are to be drawn should be geometrically exact.³³

Municipal corporation as beneficiary. A devise or bequest made directly to or in trust for a municipal corporation is valid.³⁴

State as beneficiary. In some states, under the statutes and constitutional provisions in force therein, the state is not entitled to take as beneficiary under a will.³⁵

Trustee as beneficiary. The rule that a sole trustee under a private trust cannot at the same time be a beneficiary does not apply to charitable or public trusts where there are several trustees.³⁶

b. Unincorporated Association

Although an unincorporated association cannot take a legacy made to it outright, it may be the beneficiary of a charitable trust, except in jurisdictions where the beneficiaries must be definite and certain.

Although there is some authority to the effect that unincorporated societies or voluntary associations are capable of taking as beneficiaries,³⁷ in general it is held, in conformity with the rule as to unincorporated associations, considered in the C.J.S.

title Associations § 14 a, an unincorporated charitable association cannot take a legacy made to it outright,³⁸ although a legacy to an unincorporated branch of an incorporated society will go to the principal corporation;³⁹ but such an association may be the beneficiary of a charitable trust⁴⁰ where, as appears supra § 36, a competent person or corporation has been made trustee for it, regardless of whether or not in a particular jurisdiction an unincorporated association may take as trustee or directly as donee of a charitable trust or gift, considered supra § 34. However, if under the law of the jurisdiction the beneficiaries must be definite and certain, considered infra § 39, an unincorporated association cannot be a beneficiary of a charitable trust, on account of its uncertain and fluctuating membership,⁴¹ except in the case of a valid gift inter vivos to a competent person or corporation for the ultimate benefit of the unincorporated association.⁴²

In general the class selected as beneficiaries may be either large or small. It should, however, be composed of an indefinite number of persons, although the number of persons to be selected from such class may be certain.

One necessary element of a charitable trust is that it be for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons,⁴³ except, it has been held, that the gift may be for a specified number of a certain class, the members of which are indefinite and fluctuating, where it in no way designates or identifies definite individuals as the beneficiaries.⁴⁴ However, where the purpose is charitable, the gift may be to a definite group, the members of which may be definitely and finally ascertained, and whether the members of a class are so limited as to make it a private trust is a matter which must be decided by the courts on the particular facts of each case.⁴⁵ The class selected may be large or small;⁴⁶ in other words, it is no objection that the class will be few in number,⁴⁷ or that the number of possible bene-

Class held not too narrow

ficiaries is large, provided a power of selection is lodged with the trustee.⁴⁸ Where the benefit intended is one in which all mankind may share, it is not necessary that some smaller class of humanity be selected;⁴⁹ but the courts will not sustain a testamentary trust, created for the benefit of so many beneficiaries that its administration would be practically impossible, or, if possible, barren of benefit to any one because of the insufficiency of the trust fund.⁵⁰

§ 39. Definiteness and Certainty in General

In general, Indefiniteness of the individuals to be benefited is an essential requisite of a charitable gift; but the class from which they are to be selected should be designated with reasonable certainty, although in some jurisdictions it is sufficient if provision is made for making the beneficiaries certain by the instrument creating the charity conferring on trustees the power of selection or appointment of the class to be benefited.

Indefiniteness of the ultimate beneficiaries is one of the characteristics of a public charity or charitable use;⁵¹ accordingly, uncertainty and indefiniteness as to the ultimate individual recipients are not by any means fatal to the validity of a charitable gift which in other respects is sufficient.⁵² Indeed uncertainty and indefiniteness as to the individu-

ing of a home for white widowers and bachelors who have resided within the state for more than ten years, are over sixty years of age, and have lost their means of support in whole or in part through misfortune, is not confined to too narrow a class to be valid as a public charity.—*Kitchen v. Distinguishing characteristic

(1) A distinguishing characteristic of a charitable trust is that the prospective beneficiary is undetermined and unknown.—Scarney v. Clarke, 275 N.W. 765, 282 Mich. 56.

(2) Indefiniteness of beneficiaries is the essential characteristic in distinguishing a public trust from a private one.—Long v. Union Trust Co., D.C.Ind., 272 F. 699, affirmed, C. C.A., 280 F. 686.

Best test

The best test of a public charitable trust is the indefiniteness of the ultimate beneficiaries, for, if they are confined too particularly, the trust becomes a private one.—Kentucky Christian Missionary Soc. v. Moren, 102 S.W.2d 335, 267 Ky. 358.

Changing beneficiaries

Gift for a definite class of beneficiaries, the membership of which is changing from time to time, is a characteristic of gifts for charitable uses.—Tillinghast v. Council at Narragansett Pier, R.I., of Boy Scouts of America, 133 A. 662, 47 R.I. 406, 46 A.L.R. 823.

Rule requiring definiteness inapplicable

Rule declaring bequest to an indefinite person invalid applies to private but not to public trusts and charities.—Clark v. Campbell, 133 A. 166, 82 N.H. 281, 45 A.L.R. 1433.

Where class designated or power given to ascertain it

Charitable devise will not be set aside for indefiniteness as to individual beneficiaries if the class to be als⁵³ and, in certain jurisdictions, as appears supra § 38, of the numbers, to be benefited, are necessary and essential elements of a valid charitable trust. In other words, a public charity begins when uncertainty of the recipient begins;⁵⁴ and, when an instrument creating a trust names the individual recipients or defines or designates them with certainty, the trust is a private, and not a public, one.⁵⁵

The above rules, however, refer to the uncertainty and indefiniteness of the individuals to be benefited, and not to the certainty of a class of individuals from whom the beneficiaries shall come.⁵⁶ There must be something definite in the indefiniteness.⁵⁷ The instrument creating the charitable gift must sufficiently define the beneficiaries so that the trust can be enforced by the courts.⁵⁸ The class of benefited is designated with any reasonable degree of clearness, or if power be given to a trustee or other person to designate members of such class.—Beidler v. Dehner, 161 N.W. 32, 178 Iowa 1338.

Unnecessary to name particular beneficiary

In the creation of a charitable trust it is not necessary nor usually possible that the particular beneficiary be named.—In re Graham's Estate, 218 P. 84, 63 Cal.App. 41.

Membership of church

Gift to membership of church does not cause indefiniteness so as to render the gift void.—Montgomery v. Carlton, 126 So. 135, 99 Fla. 152.

Change of rule by statute

(1) In a few jurisdictions the contrary rule, which formerly obtained, has been changed by statutes which declare that no gift or bequest for charitable purposes or uses shall be invalid on account of indefiniteness of beneficiaries.—In re Tiffany's Estate, 285 N.Y.S. 971, 157 Misc. 873.—Hornbeck v. Westbrook, 9 Johns. N.Y., 73—11 C.J. p 340 note 66 [a].

(2) Under the law as it formerly existed, a bequest in a will of testator, dying before enactment of L. 1893 c 701, of remainder of personality to "Wildenthierrbach, Oberant Gerabron, Koenigrich Wyrtemberg, the interest arising from the same to be used for the benefit of the poor of said place," was held invalid for indefiniteness or uncertainty as to the beneficiaries.—In re Crum, 164 N.Y.S. 149, 98 Misc. 160.

In Minnesota

(1) Prior to the enactment in 1927 of a statute providing that no trust for any charitable, benevolent, educational, religious or other public use or trust "shall be invalid because of indefiniteness or uncertainty of the object of such trust or of the beneficiaries thereof designated in the instrument creating the same," it was held that a gift to an individual in trust for charitable purposes must designate the beneficiaries at least in such a way that they are capable of being rendered certain.—Lane v. Eaton, 71 N.W. 1031, 69 Minn. 141, 65 Am.S.R. 559, 38 L.R.A. 669—11 C.J. p 341 note 77.

(2) However, a gift to a corporation with directions as to use was valid, not as a trust, but as a gift on condition, although the ultimate beneficiaries of the gift are more or less uncertain.—Minneapolis Young Men's Christian Assoc. v. Horn, 139 N.W. 805, 120 Minn. 404—Watkins v. Bigelow, 100 N.W. 1104, 93 Minn. 210.

(3) Since the enactment of the above quoted statute, indefiniteness of beneficiaries is not a ground of invalidation of a charitable trust.—Lundquist v. First Evangelical Lutheran Church, 259 N.W. 9, 193 Minn. 474.

persons to be benefited must be definite.⁵⁹ In some states the class from which the persons to be benefited are to be selected must be designated with reasonable certainty,⁶⁰ and, where the class is selected with the particular objects of the donor's benefaction to be determined by the trustee appointed to administer it, a valid charitable trust is created,⁶¹ but as appears infra § 40, where the donor makes no selection, even of a class, and leaves to another the choice of classes as well as individuals the trust is invalid. In other states it is necessary and sufficient that the instrument creating the charity point out the class or body of persons to be benefited with reasonable certainty, or else confer the power of selection or appointment on the trustees, and thus provide a means for making the beneficiaries certain;⁶² or, at least, there must be some trustee or executor to whom the fund is given for the charity, with discretion, to complete the general scheme, and with authority to put into execution,⁶³ or if the class be indefinite, and the power of selection be wanting, the plan or scheme or purpose must be so definite as to admit of no conjecture by those appointed to carry it into execution.⁶⁴ In still other states the beneficiaries must be indefinite, but capable of being ascertained, that is, at a given moment, all the beneficiaries who may in the future become such cannot and ought not to be ascertainable, but the beneficiaries who are such must be ascertainable.⁶⁵ In still other states there must not only be certainty as to the class of persons to be benefited but also an ascertained mode of selecting them out of such class,⁶⁶ but, as appears infra § 40, this latter requirement is fulfilled by conferring a power of selection on the trustees or other persons. The beneficiaries of a charitable trust should be of a class described in general language;⁶⁷ and where by will property is directed and devised for a particular charitable purpose as distinguished from charity generally, with a class within which a trustee can select the beneficiaries, it is not so indefinite as to be unenforceable.⁶⁸ A charitable bequest

Reasonable certainty as to class sufficient

In a will creating a charitable trust, a description of the persons to be benefited thereby is sufficient if from it the testator's intent can be ascertained, so that his trustees may execute the trust according to such intent with reasonable certainty.—*Kitchen v. Sufficient to bind trustee's conscience Generally, general purpose of testator's gift must be sufficiently indicated to bind trustees' conscience.—Cheshire Bank & Trust Co. v. Doolittle, 155 A. 82, 113 Conn. 231.

Class held sufficiently designated

Devise to trustees for furtherance of "charitable, benevolent, hospital, infirmary, public, educational, scientific, literary, library, or research purpose in Kansas City," held not void for indefiniteness or failure to designate classes of beneficiaries.—*Gossett v. Organizations "exempt" from taxation

An otherwise valid charitable trust was not defeated because provisions in will creating the trust directed that distribution be made to organizations which were "exempt" from state and federal inheritance taxes, and that payment of federal taxes would be made out of the residuary estate from which the trust was created, where testatrix' intent was to describe as recipients, organizations, gifts to which, under the federal law, would be deducted in determining the net estate upon the basis of which the tax would be payable, and to include as beneficiaries only those exclusively devoted to charitable uses.—*Mitchell v. will be upheld if the bounty can be applied to any single object within the specified class.⁶⁹

Gift to corporation. A gift to a charitable corporation for the general purposes of its incorporation is not invalid because of indefiniteness.⁷⁰

In Maryland. Prior to the enactment of the Act of 1931, which provides that as to all trusts thereafter created for charitable purposes it shall be no objection to the validity of such trusts that the beneficiaries of such trust constitute an indefinite class, it was held that indefiniteness as to the beneficiaries was fatal;⁷¹ but a gift to a corporation for charitable uses within the scope of its charter was valid, unless the intention to create a trust was clear;⁷² and under the express provisions of a statute a devise or bequest for charitable uses was relieved of uncertainty when the will contained directions for the formation of a corporation to take the devise or bequest, and such corporation was formed within a specified period of time after probate of the will.⁷³ Since then, however, a gift to an indefinite class will be upheld as a gift to charity if the object of the gift is for a purpose commonly understood as charitable and the recipients are such persons as the charities, within the range of their activities, may be financially able to admit, under such rules and regulations as may effectuate the purposes of the gift.⁷⁴

In Virginia, where the doctrine of charitable uses does not obtain in its fullest extent, as appears supra § 6, uncertainty in the beneficiaries of a charitable devise or bequest is fatal,⁷⁵ if the named trustee is an individual or an unincorporated body, unless expressly validated by statute.⁷⁶

§ 40. Selection by Trustees or Other Designated Persons

Gifts are not void for uncertainty as to beneficiaries where the trustee or some other person is empowered to select the beneficiaries, and ordinarily, in such case, it is sufficient if the gift is to charities generally.

The fact that the beneficiaries of a charitable trust are indefinite and uncertain, as is shown supra § 39, necessarily calls for the vesting of the power of selection in some person or in some body.⁷⁷ So it is a general rule that a gift for a charitable use, which is sufficiently definite and certain as to purpose, for a consideration of which see supra §§ 20-21, is not void for uncertainty as to beneficiaries, where power to select the individual beneficiaries is given expressly or impliedly to the trustees or to other persons or corporations;⁷⁸ and if the objects of the charitable trust are not suffi-

Power to make selection shown

(1) Bequest to Denver Foundation for benefit of needy Denver people held not invalid on ground that particular beneficiaries were not specified, where executor was one of members of Foundation, since testatrix indicated desire that fund should be administered in accordance with Denver Foundation's plan, and distribution committee under such plan had authority to select individuals to receive benefit of bequest.—Jeffreys v. International Trust Co., 48 P.2d 1019, 97 Colo. 188.

(2) Where a will created a trust fund in executors on specified terms, and provided that from the residue of such fund, after payment of special bequests, there should be made annually liberal donations for charitable purposes, especially to a named orphans' home, and assistance to homes for fallen women, the executors were authorized to make donations to other charitable institutions which in their judgment were deemed subjects of charity, as well as to the more specifically mentioned homes.—Hodgson v. Hodgson, 102 S.E. 525, 150 Ga. 51.

Right to challenge selection

Where, at the close of the World War, the executive committee of the War Chest fund of the county appropriated the balance in hand to the local chapter of the American National Red Cross to be used for the benefit of ex-service men and their families a charitable trust was created in the hands of the donee, and an incorporated company of ex-service men from the county is not entitled to have the gift set aside and transferred to it.—American Nat. Red Cross v. Feltner Post, 159 N.E. 771, 86 Ind.App. 709.

Trusts held valid

(1) A bequest of the residue of an estate to such religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational Hebrew associations as might be selected by the executors was not invalid as indefinite.—Rabinowitz v. Wollman, Md., 197 A. 566.

(2) Gift of money to Red Cross for relief of ex-service men and their families held to create valid charitable trust.—American Nat. Red Cross v. Feltner Post, 159 N.E. 771, 86 Ind.App. 709.

(3) Will devising residue to executors for distribution among permanently disabled soldiers of late World War, in hospitals or institutions in or near Greater New York, whom executors and trustees may select, held valid.—In re Philipoteaux's Estate, 245 N.Y.S. 303, 138 Misc. 208.

(4) Bequest to "a Protestant Episcopal Mission to be named by my sister" held not void for indefiniteness and uncertainty as to beneficiary, where sister, on probate of will, designated certain mission as beneficiary.—In re Brendel's Estate, 269 N.Y.S. 791, 150 Misc. 136.

(5) Bequest to "the Rev. J. O., in trust, nevertheless, to devote the same to the use and benefit of any church or charitable institution as he sees fit, or in his discretion," held not void for indefiniteness or uncertainty of the persons designated as beneficiaries.—In re Werner's Will, 181 N.Y.S. 433.

(6) Charitable use shown by a settlement, directing the trustee to select at the end of a year an organization which cares for, supports, and maintains and educates, when needed, orphan children, indigent persons, and needy old people, one, any, or all of them, in a certain county of the state, or which cares for and supports, when needed, indigent, injured, or helpless miners, their wives or children, any, one, or all of them, in the state, and to pay to it the income from the trust estate for the year, to be used for such purposes, one, any, or all of them, and to do this each year, selecting a different organization or continuing payment to the one previously selected, held not so indefinite as to render the trust void.—Johns v. Birmingham Trust & Savings Co., 88 So. 835, 205 Ala. 535.

(7) Where will directed trustees to pay stated amount annually to certain charity, and to contribute to other named charities, annual amounts to be determined by trustees, and provided that other similar charitable or educational institutions, if established in the same city, might in trustees' discretion be added to the list, the devise was not void for uncertainty as to beneficiaries, under Ky.St. § 317.—Gill's Ex'r v. Woman's Club of Louisville, 266 S.W. 378, 205 Ky. 731.

(8) Trust, whose income was to be paid over to incorporated institutions, to be selected by trustee, to be used in research in agricultural chemistry, was not so indefinite and uncertain as to beneficiaries as to render administration of trust impossible, in view of fact that trustee and advisory association named in will were both domestic corporations, and that, under Personal Prop.L. § 12, attorney general can represent beneficiaries in enforcement of trust, and has duty to compel by judicial decree application of fund to public use contemplated by will.—In re Frasch's Estate, 211 N.Y.S. 635, 125 Misc. 381, affirmed 215 N.Y.S. 848, 216 App.Div. 797, which is affirmed 156 N.E. 656, 245 N.Y. 174.

ed to societies or institutions in a certain city is factually defective,⁸² as is also a bequest by a testator of his property to trustees "to be by them distributed to such persons, societies or institutions as they may consider most deserving" the trust being too indefinite to be carried into effect as a private trust, and unable to be upheld as a charitable trust on account of not being limited to persons in need of assistance or to objects which come within the class of charitable uses.⁸³

In many jurisdictions gifts are not void for uncertainty as to beneficiaries where the class is described generally as such charities, charitable institutions, or objects as the trustee deems best to choose or designate.⁸⁴ Under a statute requiring a charitable gift and trust to point out with reasonable certainty the purposes of the charity and the beneficiaries thereof, where the purpose of the charity is made reasonably certain by the instrument creating it, the beneficiaries may be designated as a class only, leaving the particular objects of the generosity within the class to be determined by the trustee appointed to administer the bounty or by the court itself;⁸⁵ but the bequest, in order to be valid and capable of being rendered effectual, must be limited, in terms, to the benefit of some class of persons or objects, even when the bequest is accompanied by full power vested in some one to designate the charity;⁸⁶ and where neither class nor object is selected or designated by the donor, and it is left to the trustee to make the choice, the gift fails.⁸⁷

Limited to organizations engaged in charitable activities

(1) "Fraternal" associations, chosen by trustees as beneficiaries of charitable testamentary trust, must be engaged in charitable activities, and money received by them must be devoted thereto. — Clark v. Cummings, 137 A. 660, 83 N.H. 27.

(2) A bequest of the residue, "to pay same over to such charitable organizations, associations or institutions" as the executors "may deem worthy," giving the executors full discretion in determining the distribution "among worthy charities," is valid as against the contention that the gift may be devoted to purposes which are not charitable. — King v. Rockwell, 115 A. 40, 93 N.J.Eq. 46.

(3) A bequest of the residue of an estate to such religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational Hebrew associations organized exclusively for such purposes, as might be selected by the executors, was not invalid as permitting the executors to choose between charitable and noncharitable organizations, since general purpose to be served of all the classes designated was "charitable." — Rabinowitz v. Wollman, Md., 197 A. 566.

In jurisdictions where the doctrine of cy pres is in force, see infra § 52, the elimination of a designated legatee or its failure to take or renunciation of the legacy will not cause the distribution of the property as intestate property, but the court will select another charity of like character as beneficiary where the intent of the testator to devote his estate to charitable purposes is plain and positive.⁸⁸

Ordinarily it will be presumed that the party designated to make the selection will properly discharge his duty, and, within the class indicated, select an institution which will effectuate the aims and purposes of the gift.⁸⁹

Person or institution designated to make selection. The power of selection of the particular person or object to be benefited out of the particular class selected by the person establishing the charity may be vested in certain named trustees.⁹⁰ It is not necessary to the validity of a charitable trust that the trustee should be clothed with power to select the beneficiaries, but it is sufficient if some person or corporation is given that power;⁹¹ nor is the validity of the trust affected by the fact that the selection of beneficiaries is left to a trustee or agency

not interested.⁹² If the power of selection is personal to the named trustee it cannot be exercised by a successor trustee,⁹³ although, where a charitable intent is shown, it may devolve upon the court upon the death or resignation of the named trustee.⁹⁴ If a gift to a specified class of charitable organizations, the particular organization or organizations to be selected by a trustee, by its terms is made to depend upon the judgment and discretion of a named trustee, and he fails to exercise such discretion, then the gift fails,⁹⁵ it being held in some cases that a gift to charity generally with a power in a named trustee to select the beneficiaries is void where the trustee dies prior to making a selection;⁹⁶ but if the intention of the donor is to make a gift to charitable purposes, and only the power of appointment is conferred upon the trustee, then his mere failure to act does not defeat the gift.⁹⁷

Implied authorization to make selection. Where neither the trustee nor any other person or corporation is expressly given the power of selection, the courts are very liberal, in construing the instrument creating the trust, in giving the trustee an implied power of selection.⁹⁸ Ordinarily the power to dis-

Such a gift is in effect but the delegation of authority to make the will and dispose of the property according to the trustee's purposes rather than the testator's.—Bush's Ex'r v. Mackoy, 103 S.W.2d 95, 267 Ky. 614.

Gift held not defeated

Where testator bequeathed speci-

Implied power of selection shown

(1) Under provision of will bequeathing residue to the trustees of named college, owned and controlled by the Methodist Church of the state, for the education of the sons of Methodist ministers within the state, the power to select the particular persons to be educated held impliedly given to the trustees.—Sparks v. Woolverton, 99 So. 102, 210 Ala. 669.

pense the fund carries with it, by implication, the power to select the particular beneficiaries.⁹⁹ Thus, where the fund is limited, and the scope of the charity is broader than the fund, and the donor or founder does not provide a rule or order of selection, there is in every public charity a necessary power of selection of beneficiaries in the trustees;¹ or, if property is given for a charitable use in trust for the benefit of a certain class of persons defined with reasonable certainty, and in order to execute that trust a power of selection in the trustees or some one else is necessary, that power will be implied.² If, in a gift to charity in which no trustee is appointed to select the beneficiary, the use is so expressed that the court may judge of the motive which actuated the donor so as to give specific effect to his general directions the gift will be upheld, and, as appears supra § 27, a trustee will be appointed and the trust administered by the court; but if the gift is to charity generally and no provision is made for the selection of the beneficiaries of the charity the courts will not uphold the gift.³ In jurisdictions which require that the class of beneficiaries be designated with reasonable certainty, if the class is so designated by the will, but the immediate objects of that class are left indefinite, the trustee nominated by the will or appointed by the court has the power of selecting the immediate objects to be benefited by the testator's bounty, provided they be within the general class designated by the testator; and the court itself may without the intervention of a trustee order the payment of a specific bequest to an immediate object within the class of the testator's bounty.⁴ Under a statute providing that a gift for a religious or charitable purpose shall not fail for indefiniteness of the beneficiary a gift for a designated charity, without naming the beneficiaries, will be effectuated by the court appointing a trustee to select beneficiaries.⁵

Designation of method of selection. Generally, the failure of the donor to designate the method by which the trustee shall select the beneficiaries does not affect the validity of the trust.⁶ In jurisdictions which hold bequests for charitable purposes void for uncertainty of beneficiaries where there is not an ascertained mode of selecting them out of the class designated, see supra § 39, a gift to a charitable corporation, in terms of trust or otherwise, to expend the income or principal for its general purposes or for a special purpose within its charter provides a sufficiently definite mode of selecting the beneficiaries out of the class selected so as to prevent the gift being void for uncertainty or indefiniteness of beneficiaries.⁷

Discretion of trustee in making selection. The persons authorized to select the individual recipients of a charitable gift to a described class are authorized, in determining the recipients, to exercise discretion within the limits prescribed for the will.⁸ However, a power to select beneficiaries from a particular class does not give the power to discriminate between the classes who should be benefited;⁹ so that, where a gift for the benefit of a specified class does not specify age or sex, a reasonable number of women and children may be selected as

(2) Trustee, charged with execution of provision of will giving remainder in realty "for an old ladies' home for worthy poor protestant women over 60 years of age" residing in certain towns, held to have implied power to select persons to be benefited, since power to decide as to best means of carrying out trust is impliedly given trustee.—Shannon v. Eno, 179 A. 479, 120 Conn. 77.

Incidental to power to distribute

When a power is conferred on the trustees to distribute a fund to members of a class, such members having certain qualifications, which can be ascertained only by the exercise of judgment and discretion, as the act of distribution cannot be performed except after such ascertainment of the particular beneficiaries, the principal power to distribute the moneys carries with it the incidental and necessary power of selection.—Hesketh v. beneficiaries, but not to the exclusion of male adults.¹⁰ A bequest to be expended by the testator's executors in behalf of such charities as to them seem best is a bequest to an institution or association organized for the purpose of granting relief or dispensing some good or benevolence to those who require it, and the executors are not authorized to select individuals as the recipients of the bequest, even though they are sick and without means.¹¹

Supervision of selection by court. The courts are not entitled to set aside or to question the correctness of the selection of any individual made under a will which designates who is to select the individuals to be benefited from the class selected as beneficiaries of the gift and provides that there is to be no right of appeal from his decision.¹²

§ 41. Ascertainment and Identification

The ascertainment and identification of the beneficiaries depends upon the correct interpretation of the words used in creating the gift. If the language is clear extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to aid in its interpretation, but if there is mistake, inaccuracy, or ambiguity in the designation of the beneficiary extrinsic evidence may be admitted for the purpose of determining the donor's intention.

The determination of the beneficiaries of a charitable trust depends primarily upon a correct interpretation of the words used in creating it.¹³ Extrinsic evidence of who was intended will not be admitted where the language in the instrument is clear and of well-defined force and meaning,¹⁴ so that, if there was in existence at the time the instrument creating the trust was executed a party of the name designated as beneficiary, extrinsic evidence will not be admitted to show that another party with a different though closely similar name was intended.¹⁵ In general, however, the misnomer of the beneficiary will not defeat a gift for a charitable purpose.¹⁶ Thus, in case of mistake, inaccuracy, or ambiguity in the description of the beneficiaries of a charitable gift or trust, making it difficult to ascertain and identify them, the court may consider the whole instrument,¹⁷ and may admit parol evidence as to the surrounding circumstances,¹⁸ and also the wills of others who by compact agreed with the testator whose will is being construed to leave their estates to found a designated charity;¹⁹ and where, from the language of the instrument, construed in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances, the intent of the donor is reasonably apparent and the beneficiaries are ascertainable, the court will not hold the gift void,²⁰ but will decide who are identified as beneficiaries according to the donor's intent.²¹ However, to justify the admission of parol evi-

as beneficiaries, memoranda of instructions delivered to attorney drafting will to effect that testatrix desired to make gifts for benefit of children's medical division conducted by university in memory of testatrix' husband would be regarded as of importance in determining testatrix' intent.—In re Tinker's Estate, 283 N.Y. Alternative gift where testator failed to dedicate intended college

Where a testator, after creating a trust fund, the income to be used in educating certain classes of persons, provided that they should be educated "only in a college" erected on a lot dedicated by him in a certain town, and that, "should the college aforesaid be not erected" the income should go to two other designated colleges, the income, where the testator fails to dedicate a lot, must go to the two designated colleges.—Emory & Henry College v. Shoemaker College, 23 S.E. 765, 92 Va. 320.

Associations or organizations construed to be beneficiaries

(1) Will construed, and held that a city was entitled to one half of a trust estate, including accumulated income, for the construction and maintenance of a public library, and, in case of the death of a life tenant without children, would be entitled to the other half.—Pierce v. Root, 84 A. 295, 86 Conn. 90.

(2) Evidence held to establish testatrix intended to designate, as legatee, association called by name of Methodist Episcopal "Church" or Methodist Episcopal Church "Society."—Bates v. Schillinger, 145 A. 395, 128 Me. 14.

(3) A bequest to the "Loysville Orphanage of Pennsylvania," which the evidence plainly shows was a name commonly applied to the "Tressler Orphan Home of the Evangelical Lutheran Church," etc., and which testator intended to be identified as legatee, was not invalid for failure to designate legatee.—Board of Foreign Missions of the General Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of the United States v. Shoemaker, 105 A. 748, 133 Md. 594.

(4) Evidence held sufficient to justify findings of single justice that charity created by will was for benefit of Association for Relief of Aged Women in New Bedford, will having characterized beneficiary as New Bedford Home for Aged Women.—Kingman v. New Bedford Home for Aged, 129 N.E. 449, 237 Mass. 323.

(5) Where testatrix for several years before her death was one of the board of managers of the Presbyterian Home of the District of Columbia, which was authorized to take both men and women, but had never had more than one man, a bequest in the will to "the Presbyterian Home for Old Ladies supported by the Presbyterian Churches" was clearly intended to be for the benefit of the Presbyterian Home, that being the only home in the District supported by Presbyterian Churches.—Washington Loan & Trust Co. v. Hammond, 278 F. 569, 51 App.D.C. 260.

(6) Where a will created a trust for the people of a certain city, and devised the property to a church and an industrial school to be maintained in connection therewith, a decree construing the will, finding that the trusts were established for the benefit of the church and school instead of for the benefit of the people of the city, as shown by the will, was not erroneous, the church and school being public charitable institutions, which were to act as agencies in dispensing the charity.—Worcester City Missionary Soc. v. Memorial Church, 72 N.E. 71, 186 Mass. 531.

(7) A bequest to the "Sisters of St. Joseph's Hospital, Brook avenue and 143d street," held intended for the "St. Joseph's Hospital for Consumptives," located at the specified place, in which the testator had been a patient, there being no hospital with the name stated in the will.—In re Brennan's Will, 194 N.Y.S. 334, 118 Misc. 372.

(8) Testamentary trust in favor of "Actor's Fund of the City of New York" held intended for "Actors' Fund of America."—In re Hoyt's Estate, 208 N.Y.S. 790, 124 Misc. 857.

(9) Evidence held to show that testatrix who made gifts "to Bellevue Hospital . . . for the benefit of the Children's Medical Division" without designating as to whether city or university, both of which conducted divisions of hospital, were intended as beneficiaries, dence, the instrument must contain sufficient indication of intention to warrant the application of the evidence; and, where the beneficiaries are not described in some way, evidence will not be admitted to show who was intended.²²

Ordinarily a gift to the officials of a charitable institution is a gift to the institution itself.²³ Where a gift is to an unincorporated charitable association, the association or institution, in its organized capacity, is the beneficiary, rather than the individual members composing it.²⁴ Also a gift to a particular institution to be used for the support of the people under its care is not confined to the persons actually cared for at the time the gift takes effect, but applies to all persons under the care of the institution during its existence.²⁵ A charitable institution may take, when capable of identification, although it is only indicated by the descriptive name of a particular charity;²⁶ and, where the name found in a will is a branch or a local designation of the particular work carried on by a charitable corporation, the will may be sustained and the payment of the legacy may be decreed to the parent corporation.²⁷

A corporation, organized and incorporated to receive the testator's bequest by the existing organizations of those named by the testator as the ones to organize a separate organization for the purposes

mentioned in his will, is the organization of his intention, even though one or more of the organizations mentioned in the will, having gone out of existence, and is not represented therein.²⁸

Religious views. When the terms of the gift are indefinite, the religious views of the donor are sometimes regarded;²⁹ but it has been held that such evidence is admissible only in cases where the primary object of the trust is the propagation of religious doctrine, and not where the charity is purely eleemosynary.³⁰ In ascertaining the faith of the grantor, resort may be had to the usages, tenets, and ecclesiastical history of the church to which he attached himself.³¹

Personal interest of beneficiaries. To be entitled as such, the beneficiaries of a charitable trust are never required to show that they contributed to, or have any personal interest in, the trust property, as their interest is measured by, and limited to, the uses for which the property is held.³²

Extinction of beneficiary. In jurisdictions where the cy pres doctrine does not obtain, see infra § 52, on the extinction of the beneficiary of a trust committed to trustees for their specific execution thereof, and for no other purpose, unless that contingency is provided for by the testator, the law makes the disposition which the testator has failed to intended to benefit activities conducted not by city in such hospital but activities and charitable purposes maintained by university in its children's medical division of such hospital.—In re Tinker's Estate, 283 N.Y.S. 151, 157 Misc. 200.

Citizens. A gift for the benefit of a specified class of the citizens of a named locality of the United States is for the benefit of persons of the specified class who are citizens of the United States as defined by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and who are domiciled and resident in the named locality.³⁴

§ 42. Application of Rules to Gifts for Particular Purposes

- a. In general
- b. Relief of poverty and distress
- c. Promotion of education
- d. Promotion of religion

a. In General

Under and subject to rules above stated, bequests or donations for the benefit of certain groups or for undertakings beneficial to the general public are valid.

Applying the rules stated above in §§ 37-41, bequests and donations for the benefit of certain groups or for the aid of undertakings beneficial to the general public may be valid.³⁵ Thus bequests to aid Indians in attaining justice,³⁶ for the construction of a gate or arch at some entrance to the civic centre of a particular city,³⁷ or to trustees to organize a corporation to erect a building containing a library, lecture rooms, dance hall, and amusement rooms for the use of working people of a particular city,³⁸ have been held valid.

Upkeep of cemetery lot. A devise and bequest for the perpetual care and upkeep of a cemetery lot may be valid.³⁹

b. Relief of Poverty and Distress

Under and subject to rules above stated, bequests or donations to particular institutions providing care for certain classes of the poor and unfortunate, or to certain institutions for the benefit of certain classes of the poor and unfortunate, or to trustees for the benefit of specified classes of the poor and unfortunate or for the benefit of the poor generally may be valid.

Applying the rules stated above in §§ 37-41, various gifts intended to ameliorate the condition of a particular class of the poor, sick, infirm, or other persons in unfortunate circumstances have been upheld as charitable, not only on account of their being for a charitable purpose, but also as being valid as against any objection as to beneficiaries, such as indefiniteness and uncertainty, or insufficient description of the class to be benefited, or because limited to a class, the most common illustration being that of a gift for the poor, or a certain described class of the poor, of a particular parish, town, or other place or locality.⁴⁰ In many cases gifts for the benefit of poor persons in general are held or declared to be valid.⁴¹ Other charitable gifts for the relief of poverty and distress, which are held not void for uncertainty and indefiniteness as to beneficiaries, include those for the founding and maintenance of an institution

Transfer of portion of town ineffective to transfer gift to aged

Where testator gave money to a town for the support of the aged inhabitants, the town is a donee in trust for charity and the transfer thereafter of the whole business portion of the town to another town does not give the second town a claim to the fund or any part of it.—Weston v. Amesbury, 53 N.E. 147, 173 Mass. 81.

Gifts held valid

(1) Legacy for poor, homeless children.—St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. Little, 10 S.W.2d 47, 320 Mo. 1058.

(2) Gift in trust for needy and poor women held valid.—Palmer v. Oiler, 131 N.E. 362, 102 Ohio St. 271.

(3) Devise in trust to organization for relief of young people in need of charitable assistance was not void on ground beneficiaries were uncertain or unknown.—In re Prickett's Estate, 275 P. 605, 128 Or. 591.

(4) Trust for benefit of needy poor in certain locality.—Hollenbeck v. Lyon, 47 P.2d 63, 142 Kan. 352, 99 A.L.R. 652.

(5) Charitable trust for benefit of aged and poor of named county.—Phillips v. Chambers, 51 P.2d 303, 174 Okl. 407.

(6) Bequest to poor people of Spokane held not so uncertain as to invalidate will.—In re Peterson's Estate, 252 P. 139, 141 Wash. 619.

(7) Devise in trust for benefit of disabled men in county, poor widows, deserted wives, and boys and girls within county needing means to provide education held clearly charitable, persons benefited being vague, uncertain, and indefinite until appointed, and classes being, as near as may be, perennial.—Reasoner v. Herman, 134 N.E. 276, 191 Ind. 642.

(8) Devises of money in trust "for the poor of the county of Luxemburg" and to the "poor curates of the county of Luxemburg" were not too indefinite to be incapable of reasonable designation of beneficiaries.—Beidler v. Dehner, 161 N.W. 32, 178 Iowa 1338.

(9) Bequest to the worthy poor in Ireland is valid.—Bloomer v. Bloomer, 181 A. 388, 98 N.J.Eq. 576, affirmed 134 A. 915, 100 N.J.Eq. 361.

Home for girls

(1) Bequest to priest "to be applied towards starting home for benefit of unmarried working girls, who are abused at home, after death of their parents," held sufficiently certain as to beneficiaries.—In re Kelley's Will, 245 N.Y.S. 294, 138 Misc. 190.

(2) Testamentary trust providing for the establishment of a home for unfortunate girls" and undertaking to provide for a corporation to hold the property and a board of trustees to manage it, with power to adopt regulations regarding the admission of such girls and the maintenance and conduct of the institution, held not void for indefiniteness of the beneficiaries.—Second Nat. Bank v. Second Nat. Bank, Md., 190 A. 215.

Home for incurables

Will bequeathing property to Home for Incurables for Men" and to "Home for Incurables for Women" held to sufficiently identify object of testatrix' bounty under circumstances.—Home for Incurables of Baltimore City v. Bruff, 153 A. 403, 160 Md. 156.

Hospital

(1) Trust to establish and maintain a charitable hospital for the wounded, sick, and needy is valid.—Kingwell v. Seymour, 267 P. 327, 91 Cal.App. 483.

(2) Where hospital was created to care for person suffering from "chronic" or incurable diseases, applicants should not be denied admission, even though disease may be relieved or cured.—Dillaway v. Burton, 153 N.E. 13, 256 Mass. 568.

(3) Hospital held not required to divide accommodations in fixed proportions for three classes named in will, but should divide them so as to give greatest benefit to all.—Dillaway v. Burton, supra.

Medical dispensary

Residuary clause of will, giving residue to trustees, who were to establish and carry on one or more free medical dispensaries, etc., held not subject to objection that it was uncertain as to beneficiaries.—In re Teenan's Will, 176 N.W. 857, 171 Wis. 94.

Mothers and their babies

Provision in will that home for sick and friendless shall be open and free to all honest, virtuous, sick, and financially helpless mothers and their babies held not to render beneficiaries uncertain nor incapable of judicial enforcement.—Barr v. Geary, 142 N.E. 622, 82 Ind.App. 5.

Old ladies' home

Devise to some old ladies' home contemplated substantial home.—In re Clifton's Estate, 218 N.W. 926, 207 Iowa 71.

Old men's homes

(1) A deed giving certain described tracts of land, after the expiration of the grantee's life estate, "to build an old man's home" held to make a valid gift to charity.—Bruce v. Maxwell, 143 N.E. 82, 311 Ill. 479.

(2) Bequest to "Old Folks' Homes for men in Kansas City, Mo.," cannot be claimed by charities furnishing homes for both sexes.—Bowen v. Kollar, 18 Ohio App. 10.

(3) A charitable devise in trust for the foundation of a home for aged bachelors and widowers is not too indefinite because of a provision that an applicant for admission to the home must have lost by misfortune the means he once had for support, where the other provisions required the applicant to be respectable, which, with the term "misfortune," would exclude those who dissipated their means; and the word "means" as used in that connection is not to be limited to financial means, but includes physical ability to support as well.—Kitchen v. Pitney, 119 A. 675, 94 N.J.Eq. 485, 493, 494, 495.

Salvation Army

(1) Bequest to original chapter of Salvation Army located in Council Bluffs, Iowa, held not void for indefiniteness.—In re Durham's Estate, 211 N.W. 358, 203 Iowa 497.

(2) Will bequeathing residue of testatrix' estate to the head of the Salvation Army, to be used for such charitable or religious work being done by the Salvation Army as she thought best, manifested testatrix' intent to bequeath the residue of her estate to the Salvation Army as against contention that will was void for uncertainty, since it was patent that the gift was to the head of the Salvation Army in her official capacity rather than her individual capacity, and that the bequest was to such official as a trustee for the charitable or religious work of the Salvation Army.—Durrell v. Martin, Tenn., 110 S.W.2d 316.

School and home for orphan boys

Testamentary trust for erection and maintenance of school and home for orphan boys of "Christian antecedents" held not void for uncertainty.—Conway v. Third Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Camden, 177 A. 113, 118 N.J.Eq. 61, modified on other grounds 182 A. 916, 119 N.J.Eq. 575.

Widows' or children's home

Bequest to "the needy widows home, or childrens home."—Bush's Ex'r v. Mackoy, 103 S.W.2d 95, 267 Ky. 614.

Gift to branch of charitable corporation

Charitable gifts under will held not to fail because testatrix named hospital and its children's medical division rather than specifically designating city or university, both of which conducted divisions of hospital.—In re Tinker's Estate, 283 N.Y. S. 151, 157 Misc. 200.

Trustee held not beneficiary also Board of education of church conference to which land was deeded in trust to maintain school for indigent children, was not "beneficiary" thereof, so as to render trust void.—Snyder v. General Conference Board of Education of M. E. Church South, 266 S.W. 661, 205 Ky. 812.

Masonic lodge

A bequest of property to Masonic lodge, "to be used by it as it shall determine best in each case for the benefit of its members who may be in want or distress from any cause whatever, physical or financial," is for a legal purpose, and sufficiently definite to constitute a valid and enforceable charitable or public trust for the benefit of those who were or might become members.—*Roberts v. A gift to a charitable home is a gift for the benefit of its inmates.⁵⁵

Donation for sufferers from specific catastrophe. A relief fund raised by donations of the people for the immediate relief of the sufferers from a large conflagration in a town is a private, and not a permanent or a general charity.⁵⁶

Preference for poor relatives. Where a gift is for a charitable purpose, but poor relatives are preferred, and the trustees make no selection, the poor relatives are those who would take under the statute of distributions, although the trustees might have selected from a larger class, and the court of chancery might exercise the power of selection.⁵⁷

Necessity for method of ascertainment or selection. In some jurisdictions, it is held that, where no method for ascertainment or selection is provided, a gift fails for uncertainty when it is to the poor of a certain city,⁵⁸ or to the Roman Catholic orphans of a certain diocese.⁵⁹

Poverty of beneficiary required. There is no clear line capable of demarcation as to the requisite financial status of a particular recipient in order to justify the characterization of the benefit to him as charitable;⁶⁰ and a bequest for charitable purposes is not invalid because the individual recipients are not required to be entirely destitute,⁶¹ although, of course, the instructions in the instrument creating the trust as to the degree of destitution required will control.⁶² However, a gift to

Indigent insane not paupers

Testator by his will leaving bequest to trustees of insane hospital for the benefit of the indigent insane held to have been made in contemplation of the statutory division of the inmates into the classes of insane paupers and indigent insane not paupers, and the latter class was intended as the beneficiaries of the trust fund.—Weeks v. Mansfield, 80 A. 784, 84 Conn. 544.

Benefit as limited to insane of particular institution

Where will directed the trustees to convey the residue of testator's estate to the board of trustees of the state general hospital for the insane located at M, to hold for the benefit of the insane poor of the state, with the right to expend the annual income for the support of indigent insane persons, with a preference to such persons as had a legal residence in the town of H, and a state statute, provides that insane persons committed from parts of the state lying outside certain counties, which counties do not include the town of H should be sent to the hospital at M, except as otherwise provided, and that indigents may be committed to either of two state institutions at the discretion of the probate court upon consideration of a request made by the applicant, held that while the trustees must give preference to indigent insane residents of H in the hospital at M, and if the indigent residents of H were compelled to go to the N hospital because of insufficient accommodations at the other hospital, the trustees must provide for them there, under most conditions they could expend any balance of the income remaining after H residents in the hospital at M were provided for, in the support of other indigents in that hospital, but the fund could not be expended for the support of persons confined in other places than the state hospitals, unless confinement elsewhere was necessary for lack of accommodations for patients there, and if a resident of H voluntarily applied for admission to the N hospital is not entitled to support from the trust fund.—Weeks v. Mansfield, supra.

Poor soldiers of hospital

Where residuary clause of holographic will read that "any amount left to go to the poor soldiers, Letterman Hospital" and testatrix had been a member of a relief organization actively engaged in aiding soldiers at such hospital, charitable trust was created to be used for benefit of such poor soldiers in hospital as officials in charge should determine in need of assistance, and Support from relatives

Where persons eligible to admis-

the "poor" or "poorest" of a special class can be treated as charitable only when it can be construed as a gift to those actually poor, and not to the least wealthy of a prosperous class.⁶³

c. Promotion of Education

Under and subject to rules above stated, bequests or donations for the promotion of education either to or for the benefit of some educational institution or to or for specified classes of people whom the donor desires to aid in obtaining an education may be valid.

Since, as appears supra § 15, gifts for schools and scholars and the advancement of learning, science and the useful arts generally are for a charitable purpose, the general rules applicable to the beneficiaries of charitable trusts, considered supra §§ 37-41, apply thereto. Thus gifts to maintain a school or schools,⁶⁴ to a corporation organized to establish and maintain a school⁶⁵ or formed for the maintenance of art schools and the maintenance of art students abroad,⁶⁶ for the establishment of a school for girls,⁶⁷ for the aid and maintenance of a kindergarten in a certain city,⁶⁸ for the school fund of a certain county,⁶⁹ to aid free public schools within a particular town, district, or other designated area,⁷⁰ for educational purposes in the state, other than for schools owned or controlled by any religious sect or denomination,⁷¹ or to support an annual course of lectures to be delivered in a particular locality on specified subjects under the direction of the board of education⁷² are valid and not subject to attack because of any insufficiency as to the beneficiaries. Also, a gift for educational purposes may be valid as a charity, where the donor limits the benefits of the gift to a particular class, although he does not describe the class more particularly, except perhaps as to locality, than by such terms as "poor," "needy," or "indigent" students, children, or other sion to hospital were described in will creating charity as those without necessary means of support, applicants having relations willing to support them and furnish medical and surgical treatment are not eligible.—Dillaway v. Burton, supra.

School founded by testator

Testamentary gift to trustees, invested with discretionary powers as to manner of expenditure, to aid a school founded by testator, at which white children between the ages of six and twenty-one shall be admitted free of tuition, preference to be given those who have been in attendance before and those who reside in the district, held to sufficiently describe the beneficiaries, and to be good as a gift to a public charity.—Kirtley v. Spencer, Tex.Civ.App. 222 S.W. 328, error refused.

Proper selection presumed

A devise for support of a free school to be designated by a city is not invalid, on the theory that it leaves the city free to designate a school whose teachings are contrary to public policy, as not only must it be presumed that it will properly discharge its duty, but, if it should fail therein, the courts could lend their aid.—Laswell v. Hungate, Ill., 256 F. 635, 168 C.C.A. 29, certiorari denied Bishop v. Hungate, 39 S.Ct. 386, 249 U.S. 612, 63 L.Ed. 801.

Right of school not selected as beneficiary

Under a devise to a township in trust for the support of one or more Protestant schools, one maintaining a Protestant school, which had never been selected either by the township or the trustees thereof as the one to be supported by the fund was not entitled to such fund.—German Evangelical Protestant Church v. Cincinnati, 41 Ohio St. 278.

65. Conn.—Lyme High School Ass'n v. Alling, 154 A. 439, 113 Conn. 200.

Type of school to be assisted

(1) Under bequest to church board, the trust was not for the aid of colleges exclusively, and a night school in which only common branches were taught was a proper object of bounty.—Mary S. Fithian Night School & Academy v. College Board of Presbyterian Church in United States, 102 A. 855, 88 N.J.Eq. 468.

(2) Conveyance to denominational institute for school purposes only held to create trust for education of children who might attend denominational institute only and not for the benefit of the public schools or schools generally.—King v. Banks, 124 So. 871, 220 Ala. 274.

Pupils of a school

Any doubt concerning language of charter as to persons whom free educational institute should receive as pupils should be resolved liberally to carry out charitable purpose of donor as effectually as possible. Under charter of free educational institution referring to those to be benefited as "persons" and imposing no limitation of sex, in view of purpose of founders to benefit those who might belong to their name and to town where institute was to be located without discrimination, and of practical construction given charter by successors to founders, held, that trustees were required to furnish girls educational benefits of institution.—Healy v. Loomis Institute, 128 A. 774, 102 Conn. 410.

Limitation on corporation's place of business immaterial

That charter of corporation organized to maintain art schools required business to be done in New York did not invalidate gift to it in trust for education of art students abroad.—Art Students' League of New York v. Hinkley, supra.

Provision of will giving residue to the trustees of a college for the education of the sons of Methodist ministers in the state held not void as against contention that it created a trust for the benefit of all the sons of Methodist ministers in the state, which would be of no benefit to any one because of the large number of the beneficiaries and the insufficiency of the trust fund to be of benefit to all, the intention of the testator being held to be that the fund should be used for the education of selected members of the general class to whom its benefits were limited.—*Sparks v. Number to be selected

Will creating trust fund, with direction to use the income to "support" student through a course at specified college, construed to require ample provision for one student rather than support of more than one by giving each bare necessities, but to so support more than one student when income so permits, rather than to support one in extravagance.—Hoyt v. Bliss, 105 A. 699, 93 Conn. 344.

Discretion of trustee as to mode of selection

A will creating trust fund, with directions to use income for support of student, passing the best examination, through certain college course, without specifying the details of the examination, is not invalid, as such details will be left to the sound discretion of the trustee.—Hoyt v. Bliss, 105 A. 699, 93 Conn. 344.

Where a trust was created for the establishment of a professorship in a college and a professor was provided but he never served as such, he is not entitled to any income from the trust fund.⁸⁸ A devise to "a public seminary" is not too indefinite as not identifying any one institution of learning, but may be applied to the seminary of the testator's county, or to any seminary which his executor or a court of equity may select.⁸⁹ After an offer to donate a site for a schoolhouse has been accepted by the proper authorities and expenditures have been made on the strength thereof, the donor will not be allowed to restrict the use of the school to a certain class of pupils.⁹⁰ The fact that a school requires its students to pay tuition does not change its character as a charitable institution.⁹¹ A devise of property to a specific department of a university is a devise to the department and not to the university as an entity,⁹² and the abolishment of such department by the university prior to the time the devise becomes effective constitutes a renunciation of such devise.⁹³ Under a statute authorizing educational corporations to take property by gift, devise or purchase, organizations such as library associations are authorized to take.⁹⁴

In Virginia where, as appears supra § 39, uncertainty of beneficiaries is fatal to a charitable trust, a bequest to the trustees of the proposed industrial school near a specified locality or to the church or other agency which shall establish and control such school is invalid for indefiniteness of the beneficiaries.⁹⁵ Also, under a statute which validates a gift for the education of either white or colored persons as separate classes, a gift for the founding and maintaining of an educational institution, in which the selection of worthy and dependent young men who are to be admitted to the institution is left to a self-perpetuating board of trustees, does not require the trustees to make their selection from both classes, but authorizes them to select all applicants from one class and reject all applicants from the other, and is therefore a valid gift.⁹⁶

Situs. A gift for educational purposes is good where there is no limit of space expressed,⁹⁷ where the benefit of the gift is confined in terms to a particular locality,⁹⁸ or where the limit, although real, is not geometrically exact, as where it is limited to a particular town and vicinity.⁹⁹ For instance, a gift for the education of the children, or a particular class of children, of a particular state, county, town, or community is valid.¹ While there is authority to the contrary,² a fund to establish a school for poor children will not be limited to the town as it then was, but as it may be extended in territory or divided.³

Specification as to type of school or course as controlling. A gift to procure scholarships for a certain type of schooling does not authorize the trustees to assist in the maintenance of students in other and different types of schools.⁴ In the selection of the beneficiary of a gift for the education of a certain class of people in an educational institution offering a certain type and standard of education and located in, or adjacent to, a specified locality, the dominant intent of the testator will be construed to require that preference be given to an institution offering the type and standard of education specified, even though not situated in the locality specified, rather than to an institution situated in the specified locality, but offering a course of study of a type and standard different from that specified.⁵

Acceptance by beneficiaries. Where a testator bequeathed a certain amount to be paid by the trustees of a trust fund to several universities for scholarship funds, it was held that the refusal to accept such scholarship funds, under restrictions prescribed by the trustees, did not show that the universities did not intend to use the funds in accordance with the provisions of the will.⁶

Under and subject to rules above stated, bequests or donations to religious societies or to individuals or trustees for the promotion of religious purposes may be valid.

Applying the rules stated above in §§ 37-41, a gift to a designated or described church or religious of a university, and not for the benefit of the university as an entity, on abolishment and discontinuance of such department, the trustees could not employ the property to the maintenance and conduct of some other department, notwithstanding the charter granted the university by the state where it was located provided that upon discontinuance of a department trustees should have power to determine what application should be made of funds raised or given for its endowment.—Trustees of Cumberland University v. Bequest of property to unincorporated Pleasant Ridge Baptist Church for the erection or improvement of a church house is not rendered uncertain because made to the church instead of to a trustee, since Baptist churches are strictly democratic bodies and every church is supreme in itself.—Harger v. ligious society for the use of its "members,"²⁵ or by a devise to a bishop by name or his successor in office, to be applied to such charitable purposes of the diocese, naming it, as he may deem fit.²⁶ A bequest for the benefit of a church in a certain city, but not naming nor describing it other than by the name of its denomination, has been construed to be for the benefit of the several individual churches in the city belonging to that denomination.²⁷ Where members of a religious order incorporate, using the name of the order as the name of the corporation, a devise to the name by which both the order and the corporation are known will pass title to one of them.²⁸

In various cases, instruments intended to create gifts for religious purposes have been held invalid on account of uncertainty as to beneficiaries, but many of these cases are of jurisdictions where, at least at the time of decision, indefiniteness of beneficiaries was fatal.²⁹ So a bequest to a trustee to be used by him for the extension of the kingdom of God in a certain church has been held invalid,³⁰ as is likewise a gift to some Catholic institution.³¹

At one time in West Virginia a bequest of income to be applied annually to the pastor's salary of a certain church was held void for uncertainty,³² but a bequest in trust for such a purpose of a fund which the testator himself held as trustee was held valid.³³

A state constitutional provision which prohibits gifts, sales or devises to religious societies for the support of any minister, public teacher, or preacher of the gospel, religious sect, order or denomination, without the prior or subsequent sanction of the legislature, except land, not exceeding five acres, for a church, meeting-house, or other house of worship, or parsonage, or for a burying ground, does not apply so as to invalidate devises or bequests either to a secular corporation, even though it was founded by and is under the control of a particular church or religious society,³⁴ or to a religious corporation for the use of an educational institution provided for in the articles of its incorporation;³⁵ nor does the failure of a foreign religious corporation to secure the required legislative sanction of a testamentary gift, at the first session of the legislature thereafter, bar its right to the gift on the ground of laches.³⁶

Education of young men for the ministry. A bequest in trust to pay a certain sum as income to the "proper authorities" of an incorporated church, in order to assist for the ministry young men of the church to be selected by the pastor and church council, is not void for uncertainty,³⁷ nor is a trust to aid "indigent young men" of a certain town or state in fitting themselves for the evangelical ministry.³⁸

Selection of immediate object by trustee permitted

A bequest to be applied for masses to be celebrated for testator will not fail because no beneficiary was designated, since testator undoubtedly intended that masses should be said in some Roman Catholic church, and general class of use being designated with reasonable certainty, immediate object thereof may be selected by trustee, and if trustee appointed should fail to execute wish, he may be called to account.—Obrecht v. Pujos, 268 S.W. 564, 206 Ky. 751.

Prior law in New York

*Prior to the time the law was changed so as to permit indefiniteness of beneficiaries of indefinite trusts, see supra § 39, a bequest for masses for the souls of particular deceased persons, and also for the souls of all others who may be in purgatory, was invalid.—Holland v. Alcock, 16 N.E. 305, 108 N.Y. 312, 2 Am.S.R. 420, reversing 40 Hun 372, 3 How.Pr., N.S., 106.

Number of shares of stock

Number of shares of corporation stock, which hospital is entitled to have held for it under will directing trustee to set aside, invest, and pay hospital income from five hundred thousand dollars worth of such shares, depends on value thereof when trust is effectively set up. that any particular estate was intended to be conveyed other than the words of the instrument itself indicate.⁴⁴ Since, however, charities are favored by the law, and are presumed to be perpetual, in the absence of the expression of an intention to pass a lesser estate,⁴⁵ a deed to trustees for a charitable use passes prima facie a fee, although it does not run to their heirs and assigns.⁴⁶ Also the language of the instrument and the circumstances may be such that money given for a charitable use becomes part of a charitable fund already established.⁴⁷

Where a charitable trust is created, legal title to the property vests in the named trustee.⁴⁸ In case the trust is not to take effect until a date subsequent to the death of the testator, the legal title to the property given for this purpose vests in the executor or the heir at law during the interim,⁴⁹ and under some statutes, if no person is named as trustee, title vests in a designated court.⁵⁰ However, it is in a sense immaterial who has the legal title, as whoever takes the property takes it charged with the use or trust.⁵¹

The beneficiaries of such a trust generally obtain an equitable estate therein,⁵² which becomes fixed at the time of their selection or appointment.⁵³ Ordinarily, where such power is not conferred by the deed of trust, the beneficiary of a charitable trust does not have the right to assign its right to income therefrom.⁵⁴

A statute providing in effect that personal property given to, or acquired by, trustees for a charitable purpose shall stand vested in the trustees will be construed impliedly to authorize the transfer of personal property for a charitable trust.⁵⁵

Estate of donor. A devise of property to charity is not invalidated by the fact that the testator owned only an undivided interest in the property in question.⁵⁶

Interest and accumulations. A charitable trust created in a legacy draws interest from the time of the testator's death⁵⁷ and is not governed by the rule that general legacies shall not draw interest until one year after the testator's death, considered in the C.J.S. title Wills § 1348, also 69 C.J. p 1261 note 27. Where, however, the intention of the testator is that the fund shall be set up within a "reasonable time" after his death, such fund is not entitled to interest, unless the reasonable time for payment is exceeded.⁵⁸ Where such is the intention of the testator, accumulations of a gift of corporate stock to a charity belong to the charity, even though they arise before final acceptance of the gift by the beneficiary.⁵⁹

§ 44. Conditions

A charitable gift may be subject to any legal conditions, and such conditions are subject to the usual rules governing conditional gifts and devises.

Charitable gifts may be conditional,⁶⁰ and, when such conditions are accepted, there is a binding obligation that may be enforced through the courts,⁶¹ provided they are not unreasonable, impossible of performance, or opposed to public policy.⁶² An intention to render a charitable gift conditional is not to be lightly inferred, but must clearly appear from the words of the instrument.⁶³ Mere statements as to the general purpose of the gift or the use to which it is to be applied,⁶⁴ or mere precatory expressions,⁶⁵ are insufficient to render charitable gifts or bequests conditional, and the donor's declaration of one condition excludes all others.⁶⁶ Even where the word condition is used, the instrument creating a charitable trust will not be interpreted as imposing a condition in the absence of a reverter clause.⁶⁷

Conditions in a charitable gift or bequest will be given a reasonable construction,⁶⁸ and in settling the meaning and effect thereof, the determining factor is the intention of the donor as ascertained from the entire instrument and in the light of the circumstances under which it came into existence.⁶⁹

The courts look with favor on the efforts of the beneficiary to comply with such conditions,⁷⁰ and they are strictly construed when relied on to work a forfeiture.⁷¹

Since conditions subsequent, especially as applied to charities, are not favored by the law,⁷² the intention of the donor to create such a condition must clearly be expressed,⁷³ and, if it is doubtful whether a clause in a deed is a covenant or a condition, courts will always lean against the latter construction.⁷⁴ Where, however, an intention to create such a condition in a charitable gift unmistakably appears, it will be given effect,⁷⁵ and the property or beneficial interest will vest in the charity, subject to being divested;⁷⁶ but where the condition subsequent is performed, the grantee obtains complete title.⁷⁷ Although the intention of the donor or testator governs in determining whether a condition attached to a charity is precedent or subsequent,⁷⁸ the courts are inclined to construe condi-

Provisions held not to create conditions subsequent

(1) Paragraph of will, devising all property bequeathed to trustees to testator's relatives should trustees fail to establish charity hospital and devise lapse, did not create condition subsequent that trustees locate hospital on land devised.—Gredig v. Sterling, supra.

(2) Instructions that gift to charitable corporation should be used for relief of unfortunate merchants and to aid and assist members reduced to poverty and their widows and children did not create condition sub-

tions in instruments evidencing a gift or conveyance for a charitable purpose to be conditions subsequent rather than conditions precedent.⁷⁹ A gift in trust for charity, when made conditional on a future and uncertain event, is subject to the same rules and principles as any other estate dependent on its coming into existence on a condition precedent.⁸⁰

Where no particular time is mentioned for the performance of a condition attached to a charitable grant, devise, or bequest, the law requires that it should be done in a reasonable time,⁸¹ to be determined from all the surrounding circumstances,⁸² and unreasonable delay may be considered as a refusal of the gift.⁸³ In case a limitation of time is made by the instrument creating the trust, it is deemed applicable only to the particular condition of the particular gift; it is not affected by another limitation contained in the same instrument but referring to other charitable gifts,⁸⁴ nor does it extend to another condition affecting the same gift.⁸⁵ Also, if such is the intention of the donor, even where a particular time is specified, compliance within such time may be excused by the intervention of unforeseen circumstances beyond the control of the beneficiary.⁸⁶ A court of equity may relieve against conditions, when, in view of changed circumstances or otherwise, they become more burdensome than the trustee is willing to assume.⁸⁷

Limitations as to control or management. There is a wide distinction between conditions precedent or subsequent, and administrative limitations as to the control and management of the trust,⁸⁸ the violation of which by the trustees gives rise to no rights on the part of the grantor or those claiming under him, but merely affords grounds for an application to a court of equity to enforce the proper observance of the trust.⁸⁹ So, where a vested estate is distinctly given for charitable uses and there are annexed thereto conditions, limitations, powers, trusts, or other restraints relative to its use, management, or disposal, any of which are not sanctioned by law, it is such restraints, and the estates limited on them, that are void, and not the principal or vested estate;⁹⁰ and a gift for a charitable purpose does not fail although a limitation which is not an essential part thereof, fails.⁹¹

limitation in trust is to be determined from a consideration of the whole instrument, and not from any particular expression,⁹² and where there is nothing in the surrounding facts and circumstances or the express language of the instrument to show that the donor intended a particular limitation, direction, or restriction, it will not be implied.⁹³ In general a conveyance for a perpetual charitable use does not create a conditional estate, but a trust for the charitable use which is not liable to be defeated without an express condition therefor.⁹⁴

§ 45. Gift Absolute or in Trust

Whether a charitable gift or bequest is absolute or in trust depends on the intention of the donor as gathered from the wording of the instrument construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances.

The character of a charitable gift whether a gift absolute, on condition, or in trust, depends on the intention of the donor as gathered from the words employed in the instrument construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances.⁹⁵ While it is stated that any gift to a religious or other charitable society is a gift in trust for its proper objects,⁹⁶ and that, although the instrument of gift makes no provision for a conveyance to trustees, the donated property becomes immediately charged with the trust in the hands of either the executors or the heirs,⁹⁷ generally speaking, a provision for a direct gift to charity or to a charitable organization is not a trust in the eyes of the law; it is a charitable donation.⁹⁸ Such a provision is not rendered the less absolute or converted into a trust because the donor expresses a desire, request, or hope for,⁹⁹ or suggests,¹ a particular use or application, or because the provision specifies that the donation shall be employed for one or more of the purposes for which the charitable organization benefiting thereby was formed,² or even that the bequest shall be in trust for such a purpose.³ Also, a gift of the income from property to a charity without limitation as to the Formation of corporation

A provision in a charitable subscription that a corporation is to be formed to carry the purpose of the gift into effect is usually deemed not a condition, but an expression of the donors as to matters affecting the administration of the trust.—Richards v. Wilson, Ind., 112 N.E. 780.

3. Md.—Conner v. Trinity Reformed Church of Boonsborough, Wash-

time of enjoyment and no other disposition of the corpus, is in legal effect a gift of the corpus;⁴ and a trust is not established by a provision merely that money or property be given to the trustees of a particular charity,⁵ or by an instrument which gives the same person both the legal estate and the beneficial interest.⁶ Sometimes, a testamentary gift in trust for a charitable use may be deemed an absolute gift, so far as the settlor or the testator is concerned, in order to enable the beneficiary to take the same,⁷ but not even in the case of a charity will an imperfect gift be turned into a declaration of trust, for no better reason than that it is imperfect.⁸

Where a will gives the residuary estate to executors to be transferred to a corporation to be formed for charitable purposes, nothing passes directly to the corporation, but it takes only by conveyance from the executors;⁹ but, after so taking, it does not hold the property in trust in the true sense of the term, but as its own, to be devoted to the purpose for which it was created.¹⁰

§ 46. Certainty as to Subject Matter

Certainty as to the subject matter is essential to the validity of a charitable gift or trust.

To constitute a valid charitable gift or trust there must be, among other things, certainty as to the subject matter.¹¹ The courts, however, are reluctant to hold a charitable gift or trust void for uncertainty, and will do so only when compelled by the language used.¹² There is no such uncertainty as to subject matter as will render the gift or trust void on that account where the property, or the interest therein, which is to go to the donee or beneficiary is clearly designated, but the amount thereof is necessarily uncertain until the time for payment over arrives,¹³ where the amount, although not specified, may be easily calculated,¹⁴ or where the amount of income to go to the beneficiary is specified, but the amount of principal to be set aside for the purpose of producing the income must be ascertained.¹⁵ A bequest for charitable purposes of a sum not to exceed a specified amount is not void for uncertainty,¹⁶ and a devise or bequest of a fund in trust for various charitable purposes is not invalid because it does not designate the amounts to be used for the respective trust purposes.¹⁷ It is also no objection to the validity of a charitable gift that it is made up of several parts which are to be administered together, the income to be divided according to the discretion of the trustee,¹⁸ although it has been

Bond

(1) The provisions of Rev.St. c 69, requiring trustees under a will to give bond to the judge of probate before entering on the duties of their trust, were held to be confined to private trusts of limited duration, and not to extend to a public and permanent charity, the beneficiaries of which were indefinite, and a perpetual succession of trustees provided for in the will establishing it.—In re Lowell, 22 Pick., Mass., 215.

(2) This restriction to private trusts is not affected by the revision of that chapter (Gen.St. c 100).—Drury v. Natick, 10 Allen, Mass., 169.

Duty of trustee

(1) Trustee need not see that fund payable to charity was applied in accordance with will, charity being required to apply fund as directed.—In re Grossman's Will, 227 N.Y.S. 470, 131 Misc. 526.

(2) Trustees are under duty to seek means to render trust capable of execution.—Carlstrom v. Frackelton, 263 Ill.App. 250.

(3) Trustees of hospital to which testatrix had made gift of funds for building of annex were, regardless of fact that city had taken over hospital, charged with carrying out of trust.—In re Harrington's Will, 276 N.Y.S. 868, 243 App.Div. 235, adhered to 281 N.Y.S. 93, 245 App.Div. 252.

(4) Coöperation with city by residuary legatees under will, leaving specific legacies, providing trust fund for public library in certain city and bequeathing remainder of testator's estate to his wife and daughter, was unnecessary to enable trustees to devote such fund to purposes of trust.—In re Mead's Estate, Wis., 277 N.W. 694, rehearing denied 279 N.W. 18.

(5) Will bequeathing residuary estate to city for memorial library and fine arts building, "for the use and enjoyment of all the people" thereof, creates trust in fund, acceptance of which by city created obligation to carry out such purpose.—Kibbe v. City of Rochester, D.C.N.Y., 57 F.2d 542.

Irrevocability of use

The general rule of law is that money or property devoted to a charitable use, where a trust is created, must, if the gift is accepted, be irrevocably devoted to such use.—In re Opinion of the Justices, 131 N.E. 31, 237 Mass. 613—11 C.J. p 370 note 16.

Particular uses held proper or improper

(1) Masonic Grand Lodge, holding educational and home endowment funds in trust, cannot divert moneys therefrom to home maintenance fund.—State v. Toney, 17 P.2d 1105, 141 Or. 406.

(2) Where a testator directed trustees to organize a corporation for the purpose of holding and leasing the property devised in trust and conducting a maternity hospital for wayward girls, and to transfer the stock to named churches, which he requested to continue such home, the churches could not use the proceeds of the property for other purposes, on the ground that they could not administer the trust in operating the maternity home without violating the religious convictions of the members of their churches.—Wemme v. First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Portland, 219 P. 613, 110 Or. 179, motion denied 223 P. 250, 110 Or. 179.

(3) Where testatrix directed that property be sold and proceeds used to build church, but before death of life tenant church of which she was a member erected a new building, bequest should be given to such church to be devoted to improving and equipping building so erected, rather than to another newly organized church, "build" as used in will meaning more than mere erection of outer walls and including necessary equipment.—Lightfoot v. Lightfoot, 269 S.W. 529, 207 Ky. 426.

(4) Where land was conveyed to mission institute organized for religious education on condition that land be used for mission institute purposes, use of land for home for aged was not fulfillment of condition.—Simms v. Folts Mission Institute, 276 N.Y.S. 145, 154 Misc. 384, affirmed 289 N.Y.S. 918, 248 App.Div. 668.

(5) Conveyance of lots in trust for erection of house of worship and parsonage is violated by trustees erecting business building on part institutions,²¹ and in the mode or manner, indicated by the founder;²² but, where a particular application or mode of administration is not prohibited by the instrument creating the trust, or may be deem-of lots for rental purposes and failing to erect parsonage.—Lewis v. Brubaker, 14 S.W.2d 982, 322 Mo. 52.

(6) It was not a diversion or abandonment of the charitable and pious use for which property was conveyed to a Methodist Episcopal Church as a place of worship for it to convey it in trust as a place of worship for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. — First Methodist Church of Poplar Bluff v. Berryman, 261 S.W. 73, 303 Mo. 475.

(7) Property acquired by religious society in denominational name is not held on any trust to promote doctrines or to be administered in accordance with rules of particular denomination.—Greek Orthodox Community v. Malicourtis, 166 N.E. 863, 267 Mass. 472.

(8) Where a donation of property for orphanage purposes provided that it should be used for no other object, but permitted it to be sold and the proceeds reinvested in other property for the same purposes, it was of no importance that, after a purchase of new property, the old property remained vacant for thirteen years and until its sale, it being sufficient that it was not used adversely to the express wishes of the donor.—Society of the Holy Family v. Charbonnet, 98 So. 410, 154 La. 894.

(9) Successor trustees, appointed by court after death of trustee under will creating trust fund for establishment and support of city library, are not limited in disbursement of fund to purchase of books only under testamentary provision for expenditure of sum remaining after trustees' erection of library building on city's omission to do so within time specified, but authorized to devote it to making of future additions to library, where city's library facilities were inadequate. — In re Mead's Estate, Wis., 277 N.W. 694, rehearing denied 279 N.W. 18.

Performance not forbidden

Notice to town, as trustee by owners of burial lot where testator was buried, forbidding it to perform its fiduciary duties in disbursement of moneys on lot or for preservation of monument thereon was not refusal to permit trustee to carry out trust under penalty of being treated as trespasser.—McCoy v. Inhabitants of Town of Natick, 129 N.E. 381, 237 Mass. 99.

Use not specifically declared

(1) Property given to church nominee, in absence of declaration of trust or use, must be construed, as intended, to promote purpose for which church was instituted.—Mont- gomery v. Carlton, 126 So. 135, 99 Fla. 152.

(2) A gift or bequest to an unincorporated or incorporated association existing solely for charitable work will usually be construed to be held on trust for that purpose.

Donation to another corporation

A charitable corporation cannot donate its funds to another corporation organized for similar or other purposes, except to assist to carry out purpose for which the charitable corporation was created.—Northwestern University v. Wesley Memorial Hospital, 125 N.E. 13, 290 Ill. 205.

Preference indicated by founder

In directing administration of trust for benefit of university, founder is not precluded from declaring what preference shall be given to any particular class.—In re Purington's Estate, 250 P. 657, 199 Cal. 661.

Changes in school system

(1) The creator of a charitable trust is presumed to have contemplated legislative changes respecting the school system, and, under a trust providing for the expenditure of the income for school purposes in a certain district, where such district has been abolished except for the purpose of holding and enjoying any property held by it in trust, it has been held that the income should be paid to the school board of the town district of which it forms a part.—Drury v. Sleeper, 146 A. 645, 84 N.H. 98.

(2) Where will devised land to certain school districts for public school purposes, the discontinuance of the district and the inclusion of the territory thereof in other districts did not destroy the trust, but the income will be apportioned to such other districts in proportion to number of children in the old district in each of such districts.—Chandler

Control of executors over trustees

A clause requiring the trustee accepting the trust to enter into terms with the executors does not empower the executors to impose unreasonable terms on the trustee and thereby defeat the trust.—Young v. Davis, 252 S.W. 100, 200 Ky. 76.

Expenses

Provision for payment of expenses attending management of testatrix's "estate" refers to endowment part of trust estate. Where will provided for payment of "expenses (such as taxes, special assessments . . .)" attending management of estate out of income, but directed reasonably permanent improvements other than ordinary repairs to be charged to principal, special assessments are properly charged to principal or capital account.—Samuel and Jessie Kenney Presbyterian Home v. State, 24 P.2d 403, 174 Wash. 19.

Maintenance in "perpetuity"

Will directing that income from fifteen thousand dollars be used to endow two free beds to be maintained in hospital in "perpetuity" required such maintenance only so long as trustee administered funds under will.—In re Stark's Will, 234 N.W. 750, 203 Wis. 611.

Performance of condition impossible

Where gift provided that before income could be used for particular purpose, beneficiaries and amounts of income should be approved by testator's sons, or survivor of them, sons having died without having approved such use, fund must be wholly devoted to further uses designated.—Boston Safe Deposit & Trust ed by construction to be within its terms, it may be adopted in order fully and properly to execute the trust and to effectuate the intent of the donor or testator.²³ Sometimes a provision, in the instrument creating the trust, as to a particular application of the funds is considered merely directory;²⁴

and the donor may legally give the trustees wide discretion as to the management of the trust,²⁵ and a power to decide on the best means to employ for carrying out the charitable purpose is sometimes given by implication.²⁶ The fact that another agency performs what the trustees are directed to do

Title and management of duplicate fund in absence of contrary indication presumably follows that of fund duplicated.—City of Boston v. Curley, 177 N.E. 557, 276 Mass. 549.

Purchase of books for library

(1) A bequest to trustees of money to be invested by them and the income "to be used by them for the benefit of the library" of a certain association does not require them to pay the income to the association, but they may select and purchase the books or supplies.—Hartman v. City of Pendleton, 186 P. 572, 96 Or. 503, 8 A.L.R. 904, opinion modified on other grounds on petition for rehearing 190 P. 339, 96 Or. 503.

(2) Where, owing to controversy as to who was beneficiary of a library fund, intended annual expenditures were halted and accumulations not expended, so that the amount accrued, not including the principal, aggregates more than double the amount of the original fund, such fund will not be used all at once in the purchase of books, thus leaving the library to depend on a small income provided by an amount of five thousand dollars bequeathed for its support, but the whole amount will be treated as principal, and the annual income applied to purchase of books and supplies.—Hartman v. City of Pendleton, 190 P. 339, 96 Or. 503, modifying opinion on petition for rehearing 186 P. 572, 96 Or. 503, 8 A.L.R. 904.

Erection of building

Under trust fund for relief of "all poor immigrants and travelers coming to St. Louis on their way, bona fide, to settle in the West," income from trust, in so far as not required for specific objects intended, is not available to erect building for administration of relief to persons entitled to benefit of such charity.—Thatcher v. Lewis, 76 S.W.2d 677, 335 Mo. 1130.

Establishment of hospital

(1) Executors authorized and empowered to carry out according to their best judgment the provision of the will giving the residue for the purpose of establishing, building, and equipping a public hospital may organize an executive force to operate and manage it, and this, too, through the formation of a society, association, or corporation, all this being implied in, and referable to, the duty of "establishment."—Harter v. Johnson, 115 S.E. 217, 122 S.C. 96.

(2) Under will establishing trust for children's hospital, hospital is not required to be sectarian organization in absence of showing of testator's intent, nor is hospital required to be separate institution, but may be connected with another hospital.—In re Stark's Will, 234 N.W. 750, 203 Wis. 611.

Fund for meeting operating deficiency

Under discretion lodged in executors by will to carry out according to their best judgment the provision giving the residue for the purpose of establishing, building, and equipping a public hospital in the town of F, for treatment of white and colored patients, they may well, and should, take into consideration the size of the town, the health and needs of the community, the proximity of similar institutions, and other matters affecting the reasonable extent of the venture, with the result of leaving part of the fund for meeting deficiency in operation, as a proper element in the policy of a sound "establishment."—Harter v. Johnson, 115 S.E. 217, 122 S.C. 96.

A bequest to a church board which was subject to the authority of the general assembly of the church must be deemed necessarily to include and embody a direction that any appropriate orders of the general assembly touching the administration of the trust fund within the fields defined by the trust shall control its disposition.—Mary S. Decision whether nucleus of congregation exists

Where the testator's executors were directed by his will to erect and transfer a church to a certain denomination, provided the nucleus of a congregation could be found in the neighborhood, it was held that the church trustees, and not the executors, were to judge whether there were enough persons to organize a church.—Fidelity Ins., etc., Co.'s App., 99 Pa. 443, affirming 15 Phila. 17.

The manner of the application of the trust funds need not be described in detail by the donor.—In re Graham's Estate, 218 P. 84, 63 Cal.App. 41.

Solvency of beneficiary

Where declaration of trust in favor of sanatorium provided for forfeiture of trust on sanatorium's failure to have paid its debts within three months after notice so to do from trustees to be given every other year in case trustees are satisfied that the sanatorium cannot meet its indebtedness, the income due from trustees, but in fact unpaid, was properly considered as assets of the sanatorium in determining its financial condition on certain date.—Bancroft v. Maine Sanatorium Ass'n, 109 A. 585, 119 Me. 56.

Successor trustees

Charitable trust for purposes selected by trustees is valid in hands of successor trustees, notwithstanding testator's specific expression of confidence in trustees named in will, where he also provided for succession.—Chicago Bank of Commerce v. has been held not to relieve the trustees,²⁷ and, where the trust is for educational purposes, the trustees may, in administering the trust, work in conjunction with the public school authorities,²⁸ provided, in so doing, they do not go beyond the terms and purpose of the trust.²⁹

The amount to be devoted to a particular purpose, or to be apportioned to a particular beneficiary, is largely dependent on the terms of the instrument creating the trust;³⁰ and the amount may be paid over when conditions precedent have been performed.³¹ Where authorized, either expressly or impliedly, the trustees may exhaust the funds donated for the purpose of the trust;³² and, in an action to compel the distribution of a fund contributed for the relief of sufferers from a disaster, where the part of the fund specifically designated for the use of such sufferers had been paid out, one claiming as a sufferer cannot compel the distribution of any part of the remaining funds to himself.³³

It is the duty of trustees or custodians of a charitable fund to keep it separate from other moneys in their hands; and they are chargeable with everything for which they have not accounted as having been expended for proper purposes.³⁴ While the trustees must make no contracts inconsistent with the trust,³⁵ and, where they are given discretion to apply a fund to either a legal or an illegal object, the law forbids them to apply the fund to the illegal object,³⁶ it will not be presumed that the trustees will misapply the funds.³⁷ Although the trustees' misapplication of the income of a charity, if made in good faith and continued for many years, will not be lightly disturbed,³⁸ generally no

length of time of diversion from the plain provisions of a charitable foundation will prevent its restoration to its true purpose.³⁹

In accordance with general rules, a trustee of a public or charitable trust applying for a discharge has a duty to account.⁴⁰ Where a donation agreement provided that the money should revert on the happening of a condition, but notwithstanding the happening of the condition the continuance of the agreement was recognized, the trustees, as respects their individual liability, have been held entitled to treat the donation as if such condition had not happened until a demand for the return thereof was made.⁴¹

Although a charitable devise is adjudged invalid for uncertainty, all expenses of caring for the property should be paid, and reasonable compensation made for its management, where it has been well and faithfully administered.⁴² Where part of a college endowment fund is used for erecting a building and payment of general expenses, it is converted into general assets and cannot be restored to the endowment fund to the prejudice of the creditors.⁴³

The fact that the trustees are authorized by statute to incorporate does not require that they do so.⁴⁴

Joint or separate action of trustees. Generally, the power, interest, and authority of the trustees in the subject matter of a private trust are equal and undivided, and they cannot act separately, as shown in the C.J.S. title Trusts § 258, also 65 C.J. p. 667 note 53—p. 668 note 60, but, in cases of charitable and public trusts, however, where the number of trustees is usually larger, it has been held that the decisions of the majority of the trustees as to matters of administration will be binding on the rest.⁴⁵

Where state or municipality is trustee. Where a municipal corporation accepts a charitable trust as trustee, it assumes the same obligations and becomes amenable to the same regulations that apply to other trustees of such trusts, and among them is the obligation perpetually to administer the charitable fund in accordance with the expressed wish of the testator.⁴⁶ Thus, when the state or a municipality is the trustee of a charitable fund, it is not entitled to reimbursement out of such fund for expenditures made by it in carrying on a similar charity.⁴⁷

Conveyances to trustees should be made to them in their proper designation.⁴⁸

Discretion as to security

The trustees have the duty and the discretion to pass on the adequacy of the security.—Dickey v.

(1) In General

While the court may authorize a sale of trust property in a proper case, the power of the trustees to sell the property is dependent, primarily, on the trust instrument, and the manner in which such property is held by them.

When considering the right of trustees of a charitable trust to sell property belonging to the trust, a difference is to be noted between lands actually used for the charity itself, lands which are set apart in order to provide, by means of their income or use, a fund for the endowment of the charity, and lands which are purchased or otherwise acquired by the trustees as an investment of surplus funds;⁴⁹ and in the absence of an express provision concerning the matter, property of the character last noted is taken to be held free from any general restraint on the power to alienate which may be declared in the instrument of foundation or implied by law.⁵⁰

A sale is frequently the best mode of executing a charitable trust as to part of the property, and sometimes as to the whole of it,⁵¹ and when, by the instrument creating the trust, the trustees are invested with express power to alienate, there is no room for question.⁵² Also the instrument is sometimes so worded as to confer upon them implied power to sell,⁵³ but a power of sale does not arise

"Funds"

Will giving trustees or their successors the absolute discretion to determine to what causes and activities of a church the funds bequeathed to it should be devoted, etc., was held to have created in the trustees a power to sell realty, "funds" not having been used in the sense of personal estate, but to include all property of every kind devised.—Kratz v. Slaughter's Ex'rs, 214 S.W. 878, 185 Ky. 256.

Same power as "will trustees"

Corporation organized to administer provisions of trust for educational purposes as contemplated by will, with same powers to deal with realty as will trustees, who had power of sale, had power to sell real estate.—Bentley v. Whitney Benefits, 281 P. 188, 41 Wyo. 11.

by necessary implication from a power to make such use of the property as will most effectually carry out the wish of the donor or the testator.⁵⁴ Where a sale is expressly forbidden,⁵⁵ or where such a power has not been given expressly or impliedly, and a court of equity has not given its sanction, the trustees are without power to alienate,⁵⁶ and in such a case the lands given to charity are deemed practically inalienable, it being the very essence of a charity that it shall endure forever.⁵⁷ Of course, one who is not rightfully a trustee of the property has no right to sell trust property.⁵⁸

Sale authorized by statute or by equity court. The legislature may authorize a sale of charitable trust property,⁵⁹ and despite any lack of power that may exist in the trustee, it is recognized that a court of equity has a general and inherent jurisdiction, as incident to the administration of a charity estate, to order the alienation of charity property in a proper case;⁶⁰ and in some states the power, with certain limitations,⁶¹ is expressly conferred upon the court by statute.⁶² The court is not deprived of its inherent jurisdiction to order a sale of the property of a charitable trust by a statute authorizing the trustees to lease⁶³ or to sell the land,⁶⁴ or authorizing the creation of a charitable trust by which the subject matter shall be inalienable.⁶⁵ It has also been held that the power may be exercised by the court even where the donor intended to have the land conveyed used in specie and provided that it should not be sold or alienated,⁶⁶ provided, how-

Rents, profits, and income

Provision of will devising farm to town for poor, that all rents, profits, and income be applied to their support and maintenance, was held not to authorize removal of part of wall around farm, or platting of part of farm into lots for residence purposes as forbidden by a previous provision.—*City of Providence v. Where trustees, without authority, conveyed to corporation realty held upon trust for charitable purpose, circuit court's statutory act in approving proposed charter of corporation did not change status of trust realty, and charter provisions relating to powers and duties of trustees under charter could not enlarge their powers and duties, as each set of trustees was governed by the trust instrument.—*Jordan v. ever, the sale will not prejudice the trust, charity, or purpose for which the same is held, and that it can be made without violation of any law conferring an immunity or exemption from sale or alienation.⁶⁷

Unless the trust is coupled with a condition for reverting if the trust be breached,⁶⁸ the power, whether inherent in the court or conferred by statute, is properly exercised where changed conditions and circumstances make the alienation of a part or all of the property essential to the beneficial administration of the charity;⁶⁹ and, notwithstanding a provision of reverter, if the grant of the property is incident to the main purpose of the grantor, it is not of the essence of the charity and the court may properly order a sale where it is no longer available for the use for which the grantor had intended.⁷⁰ However, such power should be exercised cautiously and only where it clearly appears that the proposed alienation is clearly for the benefit of the charity,⁷¹ and a power to sell such property cannot be conferred upon the trustee to act in the future as he alone shall determine to be wise or necessary.⁷² Also, whether the sale is proposed to be made under authority of a court of equity, or by virtue of an express or implied power vested in the trustees, the property cannot be sold for any purpose other than that of carrying out the purpose of the trust;⁷³ and, after the sale has been made, the moneys received therefrom are impressed with the trust and must be so applied as to carry out its purpose;⁷⁴ but the purchaser of the property is not required to follow the funds in the hands of the vendor in order to see that they are invested as directed in the act of donation.⁷⁵

Leases. Whether the trustees may lease the property is primarily dependent on the terms of the instrument creating the trust.⁷⁶ Long leases will not be set aside when made by trustees of a charitable trust who are given an unlimited discretion.⁷⁷ Leases directed by the testator for so long a period as sixty years, with covenants for their perpetual renewal, operate as a substantial alienation of the premises;⁷⁸ and, accordingly, the trustee has a power of alienation limited only as to form.⁷⁹

Compensation of trustees. The compensation of trustees on a sale of the trust property or a part thereof is sometimes regulated by statutory provisions.⁸⁰

(2) Validity

While a sale made without authority is void, in the absence of fraud, mismanagement, or incapacity, the courts are without authority to interfere with the express power of the trustees to manage and sell the property.

The managers and operators of the properties of a charitable trust have been held not precluded nor disqualified from purchasing such properties from the trustees;⁸¹ but where a sale is made without authority, the deed is void and subject to cancellation, at least where the purchaser had notice of the lack of authority.⁸² Any inquiry as to the trustees' good judgment in selling the trust property under power expressly conferred is barred if the statutory method of sale was followed;⁸³ and in the absence of fraud, mismanagement, or incapacity, the courts are without authority to interfere with the express power of the trustees to manage and sell the property.⁸⁴ Also, a sale will not be set aside in the absence of a showing that the price is inadequate, or that a resale would probably result in a higher price.⁸⁵

b. Mortgaging Property

The power of the trustees to mortgage the property is dependent on the trust instrument and if such power is expressly denied, a court of equity has been held without power to authorize them to mortgage the property.

While the trustees may not mortgage the trust property unless authorized so to do,⁸⁶ this power may be implied from the wording of the trust instrument.⁸⁷ However, a court of equity has been held without power to authorize a mortgage of the property contrary to the express terms of the trust,⁸⁸ notwithstanding conditions had so changed that it was necessary to mortgage the property to avoid a failure of the trust.⁸⁹

Where the trustees of a charitable trust are without authority to mortgage the trust property, the property cannot be sold on an execution issued on a judgment rendered in a proceeding for foreclosure of a mortgage given by them.⁹⁰

c. Loan or Investment of Funds

The right or duty of the trustees to loan or invest the trust funds is dependent, in the first instance, on the instrument creating the trust.

The right or duty to invest or loan the trust funds is sometimes expressly regulated by the instrument creating the trust.⁹¹ Under a will declaring that certain stock should become a trust fund and part of it put aside and invested for a particular charity, it has been held that the trustee had a right to retain the fund in the form in which it was received in the absence of any reason to fear for the safety of the investment;⁹² and where it is directed that the principal of the fund to arise shall be loaned only on real estate security, if that particular form of security fails or becomes unavailable, the trustees may be authorized to loan on other sufficient securities without impairment of the trust.⁹³ Also, where a bequest was made to a city on condition that it pay interest at a certain per cent to the trustee for use for charitable purposes and interest at the rate specified cannot be obtained on investments suitable for trust funds, the city is only required to invest the fund in appropriate securities and pay over the income received.⁹⁴

The certificate of deposit, bond, or other investment of a public charitable fund should indicate, so far as practicable, the legal owner, the trustee, and the trust.⁹⁵

The court will not assume that an investment or reinvestment of trust property or funds would be made in such a way as to violate the law;⁹⁶ and a trustee is not personally liable for a mere error

§ 49. Judicial Supervision and Administration in General

Courts of equity exercise an extensive supervisory jurisdiction over charitable trusts to protect them and enforce their execution, but not to create, alter, or destroy them.

While it has been stated that a court of equity never had visitatorial power,⁹⁸ such courts have always exercised an extensive jurisdiction over charitable uses and trusts, not only to uphold them and to recognize their validity, as shown supra § 6, but also to protect them, prevent their misuse or abuse, and enforce their execution.⁹⁹ This jurisdiction exists, although the instrument creating the trust does not expressly confer it;¹ and sometimes the instrument does expressly or impliedly show an

Where the form of trust property is legally changed, equity's supervisory power of administration follows it in its new form.—Matteson v. Creighton University, 179 N.W. 1009, 105 Neb. 219.

Personal trusts

If testator leaves his estate to charity generally, but authorizes his executor to determine for what charitable purposes it shall be used and to select beneficiaries thereof, and the will contains no other definite manner of selection, the trust is a personal one, and a court of equity does not have jurisdiction to determine the purpose or select beneficiaries.—Allred v. Beggs, 84 S.W.2d 223, 125 Tex. 584, affirming Beggs v. Allred, Civ.App., 73 S.W.2d 599.

Trustees of religious, charitable, or other public trusts have been held not required to make annual returns to the court of ordinary, under a statute which applies to trustees charged with the management of estates of which private individuals are the beneficiaries.—City of Waycross v. intent to vest a supervisory power over the management and control of the trust property in a court of equitable jurisdiction,² and in some states the jurisdiction is expressly conferred, or at least restored, by statute.³ The court, in all of its doings, represents the persons, institutions, and classes who are to be benefited,⁴ and this jurisdiction over charities extends to such as are founded or supported by voluntary contributions or subscriptions when there is property impressed with a charitable trust,⁵ notwithstanding some contributions were made by citizens of other states.⁶

The supervisory power of courts of equity often enables them to control the trustees in the direction and management of the trust, but they have no authority to interfere with the just exercise of the trustees' powers and duties.⁷ In other words, while the ultimate control rests in the court,⁸ yet a charitable trust will not be interfered with while the trust estate is being managed according to the donor's intention.⁹ Thus, while equity will compel the trustees to exercise their discretion,¹⁰ and will decide, as a question of fact, whether the trustees have reasonably and fairly exercised their discretion,¹¹ where such discretion is being fairly and honestly exercised the court will not control or interfere with it,¹² nor substitute its own discretion for that of the trustees.¹³

This jurisdiction includes power to construe the trust instrument,¹⁴ to remove or to suspend an unfaithful trustee,¹⁵ to correct irregularities in administration,¹⁶ to restrain a contemplated breach of trust or abuse of power by the trustee,¹⁷ to protect the trust property from loss or diversion,¹⁸ to give directions for the future administration of the trust,¹⁹ to instruct the trustees in case of doubt as to their powers and duties,²⁰ and, as shown supra § 48, to order a sale of the trust property.

Trustee may ask court for instructions

When in doubt as to his powers or duties, a trustee may ask the court for instructions.

Me.—Snow v. President and Trustees

However, the jurisdiction of a court of equity or chancery is not so extensive as to authorize its interference in all cases.²¹ Its jurisdiction is not to create or to alter the trust,²² or to destroy the trust,²³ or to sanction a diversion of any portion of the trust estate,²⁴ but its powers are confined to the mere execution of the trust, to secure the faithful application of the fund or property to the use and object indicated in the deed or will, or, in other words, to carry out the intention of the grantor or testator as thus expressed.²⁵

There is a wide distinction between a gift to a charity and a gift to a trustee to be applied to a charity, as in the former instance all that is necessary to be done is for the court to award the fund to the particular charity, the action of the court in this respect being ministerial only; whereas in a gift to a trustee to be applied to a charity, the court has jurisdiction over the trustee, as it has over all trustees, to see that he does not commit a breach of his trust or apply the fund in bad faith or to purposes that are not charitable.²⁶ Also, a scheme of charity is to be distinguished from a scheme or plan for administering it; in the former, while the courts may be expressly or impliedly empowered by the donor to direct the particular manner of carrying out the scheme, they cannot infringe upon, change, or modify the nature of the charity as established by the donor.²⁷ Thus, if the donor or the trustee, where the latter is so authorized, does not frame a scheme for the administration or distribution of the trust, a scheme for administration will be devised by the court.²⁸

Reviewing exercise of visitatorial powers. The duty of the courts touching the determination by visitors acting within their general jurisdiction is to interpose to prevent action contrary to law in the administration of the trust. Generally, where a visitor has given a decision within his powers, it is final and not subject to reexamination at law or in equity, and the ordinary exercise of visitatorial powers, if founded on any evidence, is not reviewed by the courts.²⁹

Administration by court. It is held that, where a trustee is not appointed by the testator, and the will does not declare the manner in which the charitable devise is to be made effectual, equity will not administer the trust;³⁰ but that, where the trustees of a church fail to administer a fund created for the purpose of taking care of the poor of the church, the court will take charge of the fund until such time as it is evident that the higher authorities of the church will take charge of and properly administer it.³¹ On the death of the trustee under a valid charitable trust, the execution of the trust is devolved on the supreme court under some statutes;³² and on the resignation of a testamentary trustee having a personal power of appointment to designate a beneficiary, such power of appointment has been held to pass to the supreme court.³³

Under the general jurisdiction of a court of chancery to administer the estate of a charity, it has power to vary the precise terms of a charitable trust when necessary.³⁴ It is a natural and necessary branch of the jurisdiction over charitable trusts that the means or details prescribed for their administration should be subject to be molded so as to meet any exigency which may be disclosed by a change of circumstances, and to relieve the trust from a condition which imperils or endangers the charity itself or the funds provided for its endowment and maintenance.³⁵

This power to vary the details of administration is sometimes called the equitable doctrine of approximation,³⁶ and as such is not confined to the administration of charities, but is an essential element of equity jurisprudence.³⁷ While the doctrine of approximation has been held not to take the place of, nor to be the same as, the cy pres doctrine,³⁸ the doctrine of cy pres as modified and applied generally in the United States has also been called the doctrine of approximation, as shown infra § 52. The doctrine of approximation is in the nature of a judicial construction of the trust as intended by the grantor when considered in the light of changed conditions,³⁹ but the possibility of a use of the property merely approximating the use intended by the grant will not save the trust.⁴⁰ Also, the impossibility of using trust property as directed has been held not to empower the court to change the beneficiaries,⁴¹ and the court cannot devote any portion of a fund, dedicated to a charitable use, to an object not contemplated by the donor.⁴²

The jurisdiction merely "to vary the details of administration" is said to be more liberally exercised,⁴³ and perhaps to be more firmly established and more widely recognized than is that which is usually called the cy pres power of the court.⁴⁴ However, it is difficult to distinguish many applications of the cy pres doctrine from an exercise of the power to vary the details of administration.

§ 51. — Prerogative Power

The prerogative power by which the king controls and carries into effect donations in which no definite charities are expressed or no trustees appointed has never been recognized as belonging to courts of equity in the United States.

The prerogative power over charities is that by which the king, in consequence of his position as parens patriæ, in the absence of trustees or of persons having power of appointment, controls and carries into effect donations in which no definite charities are expressed as the objects of the testator's bounty and no specific charitable purposes enumerated, but in which the gift is to charity in general. This power is executed by the lord chancellor, as keeper of the sovereign's conscience, under the sign manual of the crown.⁴⁵ This power is generally referred to by the courts as part of the cy pres power, although it is distinct from the judicial part of it which is adopted and administered by the courts of equity in the United States,⁴⁶ and this ultra-judicial function has never been recognized as belonging to courts of equity in the United States, unless expressly delegated to them by the legislature, the power lying, if anywhere, with the legislatures or the people, as succeeding to the rights of the king as parens patriæ.⁴⁷

§ 52. — Cy Pres Power as Judicial Function

- a. Definition and nature
- b. Adoption or rejection of doctrine
- c. Application and limitation of doctrine

a. Definition and Nature

Cy pres means "as near to," and the doctrine is one of construction, the reason or basis thereof being to permit the main purpose of the donor of a charitable trust to be carried out as nearly as may be where it cannot be done to the letter.

Cy pres has been defined or translated as meaning "as near as may be,"⁴⁸ and literally it means "as near to."⁴⁹

The doctrine of cy pres is the doctrine of nearness or approximation,⁵⁰ and, as modified and applied by some courts in the United States, has been called the doctrine of approximation,⁵¹ although in some jurisdictions, as shown supra § 50, the doctrine of approximation has been held not to take the place of, nor to be the same as, the cy pres doctrine. However, the equity doctrine of approximation and that of cy pres are both said to be in reality judicial principles of construction and not of administration,⁵² the construction not being the result of an arbitrary power exercised in disregard of the donor's wishes for the public benefit, but being based on a judicial finding of his intention as applied to new conditions.⁵³ The meaning of the doctrine of cy pres is that when a definite function or duty is to be performed, and it cannot be done in exact conformity with the scheme of the person or persons who have provided for it, it must be performed with as close approximation to that scheme as reasonably practicable; and so, of course, it must be enforced,⁵⁴ and the reason or basis for

Two classes

The principal, if not the only, cases in which the disposition of a charity is held or declared to be in the crown by sign manual are of two classes: The first, of bequests to particular uses charitable in their nature, but illegal, as for a form of religion not tolerated by law; and the second, of gifts of property to charity generally, without any trust interposed, and in which either no appointment is provided for, or the power of appointment is delegated to persons who die without exercising it.

Statutory adoption

Ky.St. § 317, regulating charitable trusts, is liberally construed by the courts to carry out, if possible, the charitable purposes of the donor of the trust, and no such trust will be permitted to fail for want of a trustee, but it is not construed so liberally as to adopt the cy pres doctrine, under which the trust can be extended for a charitable purpose, although no specific one was expressly named.—State Bank & Trust Co. v. Patridge, 248 S.W. 1056, 198 Ky. 403.

the doctrine is to permit the main purpose of the donor of a charitable trust to be carried out as nearly as possible where it cannot be done to the letter.⁵⁵

b. Adoption or Rejection of Doctrine

While rejected in a few jurisdictions, the cy pres doctrine or a similar doctrine is adopted in most jurisdictions.

While, as has been seen supra § 51, the cy pres doctrine, in so far as it comprehends the exercise of the prerogative power, has not been adopted in the United States, so far, however, as the doctrine of the cy pres application of charitable trusts is a branch of the general equitable powers of a court of chancery, independent of the prerogative power of the crown, it has been extensively recognized, adopted, and applied⁵⁶ with whatever limitations prevail in the particular jurisdiction.⁵⁷ In a few jurisdictions the doctrine is wholly rejected;⁵⁸ and in some states the doctrine, or a part thereof, or at least a similar doctrine, has been adopted or recognized by legislation.⁵⁹

Other statements

(1) The cy pres rule or doctrine is this: Where a testator in his will evidences a general intention to be executed in a prescribed manner, if such intention cannot be executed in accordance with the terms of the will it may be done with as close proximity to the terms of the will as is reasonably possible.—Sheldon v. Powell, 128 So. 258, 99 Fla. 782.

(2) The rule relating to the cy pres doctrine is as follows: Where the literal execution of the trusts of a charitable gift is inexpedient or impracticable a court of equity will execute them, as nearly as it can, according to the original plan. The general principle on which the court acts is that, if the testator has manifested a general intention to give to charity, the failure of the particular mode in which the charity is to be executed shall not destroy the charity; but, if the substantial intention is charity, the law will substitute another mode of devoting the property to charitable purposes, although the formal intention as to the mode cannot be accomplished.—*Allen v. In New York

(1) By L.1893 c 701 as amended by L.1901 c 291, the doctrine of cy pres is applicable.—Camp v. Pres-

c. Application and Limitation of Doctrine

The cy pres doctrine is properly applied where there is a general charitable purpose, but a literal compliance with the terms of the trust becomes impossible or impracticable, in which case the court directs the administration of the trust as nearly as possible in conformity with the intention of the donor or testator.

While the absence of express words of trust does not prevent the application of the cy pres powers of the court,⁶⁰ the cy pres doctrine, as applied judicially, unlike that of approximation, relates only to charitable gifts, and also only to such gifts as are valid.⁶¹ A statute conferring on certain courts power to administer the subject matter of a charitable trust cy pres, where the circumstances have changed since the execution of the gift, is not applicable where the title of the donor fails because fraudulently obtained.⁶²

The cy pres doctrine is properly applied in a case where there is a general charitable purpose, but a literal compliance with the terms of the trust becomes impossible or impracticable, in which case the court directs the administration of the trust as nearly as possible in conformity with the intention of the donor or testator.⁶³ Thus, where the selec-byterian Soc. of Sackets Harbor, 173 N.Y.S. 581, 105 Misc. 139—In re Brundage's Estate, 167 N.Y.S. 694, 101 Misc. 528, affirmed In re Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 175 N.Y.S. 37, 186 App.Div. 722, which is modified on other grounds 124 N.E. 1, 226 N.Y. 691.

(2) By the so-called Tilden Acts, greater power has been conferred upon the supreme court, and these acts, now § 12 of the Personal Property Law and § 113 of the Real Property Law did more than make applicable to this state the doctrine of charitable uses. They authorized the court itself to apply the cy pres rule not only where a trust existed, but where the property had been devised or bequeathed to a corporation authorized to take and hold it for charitable purposes.—Sherman v. Richmond Hose Co. No. 2, 130 N.E. 613, 230 N.Y. 462, affirming 175 N.Y.S. 8, 186 App.Div. 417—In re Walter's Estate, 269 N.Y.S. 402, 150 Misc. 512—In re Mills' Will, 200 N.Y.S. 701, 121 Misc. 147—11 C.J. p 360 note 56 [d].

(3) However, where a hospital could not administer a bequest in the manner contemplated by the will, a decree holding that the legacy lapsed and refusing to apply the cy pres power was affirmed, although in a dissenting opinion it was stated that the statute is not limited, as the surrogate held, to instances where the bequest is in trust, but applies wherever there exists a gift, grant, or bequest for charitable purposes.—In re Collins' Estate, 3 N.Y.S.2d 291.

In Pennsylvania, Pub.L. 173, Pa.St. 1920 § 2592, providing that no disposition of property made for any religious or charitable use shall fail by reason of the object ceasing but that it shall be the duty of any court having equity jurisdiction in the proper county by its decrees to carry into effect the intent of the donor or testator as far as it can be ascertained and carried into effect consistently with law or equity, has been frequently applied.—In re Hunter's Estate, 123 A. 865, 279 Pa. 349—In re McCully's Estate, 112 A.

Doctrine not applicable

The cy pres doctrine is inapplicable, where supreme court construes clause in will, giving charitable corporations, dissolved before testatrix' death, stated sums for investment and application of income to their purposes and uses, as entitling other charitable corporations, selected by former corporations as their successors before dissolution, to such legacies.—Wood v. Hartigan, R.I., 195 A. 507.

Intent not impossible of execution

Trustees of a trust fund, the income of which was to be used to provide facilities for higher education in particular part of a town, were held not authorized to turn part of fund over to the town, which would otherwise be unable to provide higher education, where it was not impossible that the specific intent of the testator might later be carried out, and, in the meantime, the discretionary powers given the trustees, were sufficient to enable them to carry out the general charitable purposes of testator as by paying expenses of attendance of high school in another town.—Newton v. Healy, 122 A. 654, 100 Conn. 5.

New site for building

Court could not select new location for building testator provided for, cy pres, where site designated was still as suitable as at time will was written.—Hicks Memorial Chris-

a case where the facts simply call for the reception of extrinsic evidence to identify the donee or beneficiary.⁶⁷ The difficulty, however, need be only a reasonable one, and not such as to make the donor's plan a physical impossibility.⁶⁸ Of course, the doctrine of cy pres can have no existence when the donor himself provides for the application of the fund in the event of the failure of the charitable use to which he in the first instance directed that it should be devoted.⁶⁹ The fact that the residue is given to a charity does not defeat the application of the doctrine of cy pres to another charitable bequest which it becomes impracticable to administer precisely according to the terms of the will.⁷⁰

General charitable purpose. It is also a prerequisite to the application of the doctrine that the court can see in the instrument of trust a general charitable purpose⁷¹ of such a kind that the court can satisfy itself that some other object can be found, answering in a reasonable degree and most nearly consonant to such purpose,⁷² since where it appears that the gift was for a particular purpose only, and there was no general charitable intention, the court cannot be construction apply the gift cy pres.⁷³ To determine the donor's general intention, the court may look at all of the charitable bequests in the will,⁷⁴ and in applying the cy pres doctrine, equity is always more ready, in the case of a gift to a charitable institution which is not found or functioning, to infer a general charitable intention than to infer the contrary.⁷⁵

Failure of trust at outset or after creation. The courts are more ready to apply the doctrine of cy pres where the particular trust fails at a time after its creation than where the particular purpose fails at the outset.⁷⁶ Thus, where the particular object of the charitable bequest is in existence at the testator's death, but ceases to exist at a subsequent time, the legacy does not lapse, and the fund, having once vested in charity, may be ap-

Technical charitable trust

Cy pres doctrine is applicable only to technical charitable trusts.—Raque v. City of Speyer, Germany, 129 A. 207, 97 N.J.Eq. 447.

Extrinsic evidence

Will must first be examined, and if not entirely clear, extrinsic evidence is admissible to ascertain whether testator's intention is of general charitable nature within cy pres doctrine.—Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Williams, 148 A. 189, 50 R.I. 385, 74 A.L.R. 664.

General charitable intent shown

(1) General charitable intent making applicable the cy pres rule, were there no existing school to which the devise were applicable, was held shown by devise for support of "a school" in a city, "the tuition of which shall be free," "such free school as said [city] council shall see fit," with declaration, "I have made the gift for the benefit of the young . . . and do not wish them to lose the benefit of the gift by the neglect of others."—Laswell v. (2) Where testatrix devoted resi-

Devise to "charity"

The court will not substitute its own jurisdiction for the personality of the testator by executing a devise to "charity," since in such a case the doctrine of cy pres can have no application, because it covers the entire field of charitable activity, and to be as near as possible to the thing expressed must still be outside it.—Buckley v. plied cy pres by the court;⁷⁷ but where the testator makes a bequest to some particular object of charity, as to a particular charitable institution, and the bequest fails because the object designated ceases to exist during the testator's lifetime, it has been held in some jurisdictions that the fund never vests in charity at all, but the legacy lapses, and the doctrine of cy pres has no application.⁷⁸ However, it has also been said that the doctrine of cy pres may be applied even though the particular purpose of the settlor fails at the outset,⁷⁹ and where the donee is not in existence at the time the gift takes effect, or has not the capacity to take, the charity will, nevertheless, be enforced according to the main charitable intention of the donor.⁸⁰ Thus, a legacy to a particular association which was not in existence at the time of the testator's death has been held not to lapse, but merely to require the appointment of a trustee.⁸¹

Similarly, the doctrine has been held applicable where a defect in the method of administration is present at the time of the creation of the trust.⁸²

Manner in which applied. No general rule can be enunciated as to the manner in which the cy pres doctrine will be applied, but each case must necessarily depend on its own peculiar circumstances.⁸³ One limitation of the rule is that the

Retirement fund

That act authorizing establishment of retirement system to supersede teachers' retirement fund gave each teacher definite and enforceable rights, so that plan was not one for charitable purposes, did not prevent administration of bequest to fund payable on termination of trust, which bequest vested before fund was superseded and became payable thereafter, under doctrine of cy pres, since gift in aid of better carrying out of plan would be one for "charity."—Powers v. Home for Aged Women, supra.

Expending entire fund

A bequest to teachers' retirement fund, payable on termination of trust which vested before fund was superseded by retirement system and became payable thereafter, could be administered under doctrine of cy pres without permanent retention of principal sum payable.—Powers v. Home for Aged Women, supra.

Hospital taken over by city

Where hospital to which testatrix had made gift of funds for building of annex was in existence at time gift took effect and still existed as legal entity, that hospital had been taken over by city was held not to have caused legacy to lapse, since original hospital was capable of accepting gift and administering trust.—In re Harrington's Will, 276 N.Y. Nature of other beneficiaries

Retention of funds in state

Where testator was a resident of the state, a fund bequeathed for religious, charitable, and educational purposes should properly be retained within the state, subject to the jurisdiction of the supreme court, in view of the fact that the conditions of such gift might ultimately become impossible of performance, making the doctrine of cy pres applicable under Pers.Prop.L. § 12, and Real Prop.L. § 113, reenacting the Tilden Act of 1893.—In re Donchian's Estate, 199 N.Y.S. 107, 120 Misc. 535, affirmed 204 N.Y.S. 903, 209 App.Div. 806.

Particular applications of doctrine

(1) Where Methodist school, which was beneficiary of charitable trust, failed to function and it appeared that donor intended to establish perpetual trust for aid of school under care of designated Methodist Conference, assets of trust would be transferred to school established by such conference to carry on work of original beneficiary.—State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Van Buren School Dist. No. 42, 89 S.W.2d 605, 191 Ark. 1096.

(2) Where trust fund for benefit of enlisted men during war had been established, on close of war, investment of fund, and the use of interest for present and future needs of objects of original trust was held more proper than erection of memorial building for recreation and other purposes in interest of veterans.—Peter E. Leddy Post No. 19 of American Legion v. Roberts, N.J.Ch., 129 A. 148.

(3) Where testator created trust for maintenance of indigent females and directed use of homestead, but conditions had changed so that homestead was not suitable, court properly permitted trustee to administer trust by caring for indigent females in private or institutional homes.—In re Swan's Will, 261 N.Y. S. 428, 237 App.Div. 454, motion granted 264 N.Y.S. 898, 239 App.Div. 762, and affirmed In re St. John's Church of Mt. Morris, 189 N.E. 734, 263 N.Y. 638.

(4) Under life policy designating as one of the beneficiaries "Cancer purpose of the gift cannot be changed.⁸⁴ For example, if property is devised to education, it cannot be judicially diverted to religion, or the relief of the poor or the sick, or to general charity, or vice versa.⁸⁵ However, this limitation does not prevent the substitution by the court of another object of the same general charitable nature where the original object fails;⁸⁶ but where it is impossible to carry out the expressed general charitable purposes of the testator by the use of any means or method, the gift will lapse.⁸⁷ Also, the doctrine cannot be invoked in disregard of the express terms of the grant or devise,⁸⁸ and the court should not, under the guise of cy pres, sanction an act by the trustees which the donors have expressly prohibited.⁸⁹

Alteration of scheme once settled. After a scheme is once settled by a decree in chancery, the court has power to alter it from time to time as circumstances may require, since the control of administrative functions is entirely distinct from

Clinic of New York," where only cancer clinic in New York City was one owned and maintained by the city of New York under the name of "New York Cancer Clinic," such clinic would be considered beneficiary, notwithstanding that it was unincorporated, where gift could be made effective by awarding it to the city of New York in trust for the beneficiary.—Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. New York Guild for Jewish Blind, 299 N.Y.S. 917, 252 App.Div. 493.

(6) Testamentary trust for salary of pastor of Lyons Baptist Church "so long as said society exists" should, when church ceased to function, be turned over to state Baptist Missionary Convention to pay clergymen's salaries.—Graft v. Dunning, 244 N.Y.S. 310, 137 Misc. 715—Graft v. Harrington, 244 N.Y.S. 307, 137 Misc. 712.

(7) Where trust was created for erection and repair of buildings of college for education of orphan children of deceased Episcopal ministers of the state of Wisconsin and college ceased to exist, trust fund would be awarded to foundation for church work which took over all land and buildings of college, and maintained and used the property for educational and religious activities and cared for and educated orphan children, rather than to orphan asylum for which testatrix also provided in her will, or for college for education of Episcopal ministers.—First Wisconsin Trust Co. v. Board of Trustees of Racine College, Wis., 272 N.W. 464.

(8) College trustees, to whom will devised property in trust to use two-thirds of income for purposes of college medical school and add remaining third to trust fund until it reached stated sum, after which entire income should be used for such purposes, were entitled to payment of balance in testamentary trustees' hands and required to add entire income to principal until total reached designated sum after such school ceased to exist or function.—Snow v. President and Trustees of Bowdoin College, 175 A. 268, 133 Me. 195.

(9) Where testator left funds in trust for erection of monument to Roger Williams in specified place, request by Society of Colonial Dames to be allowed, to use funds for erection of statue of Roger Williams of such design and materials and in such location on state house grounds as might be approved by state house commission was refused as not proper application under cy pres doctrine, such commission being subject to frequent changes, not a party to proceeding, and not subject to court's direction.—Faunce v. People's Sav. Bank, 124 A. 731, 46 R.I. 75.

(10) A fund donated for the relief of flood sufferers of the Mississippi Valley could not be applied after the immediate necessity for relief had passed to organize a corporation for the purpose of devising means for the prevention of floods and to promote the development and extension of waterways of the Mississippi Valley.—Kerner v. Thompson, 13 N.E. 2d 110, 293 Ill.App. 454.

(11) The cy pres doctrine need not be applied in determining whether city or testator's heir is entitled to trust fund, created by will for establishment and support of city library, farther than to construe testamentary provisions liberally in support of trust and extend provision for purchase of books to other library purposes if conditions have become such as to render use of part of fund therefor more needful and beneficial to library than expenditure of whole sum for books alone.—In re Mead's Estate, Wis., 277 N.W. 694, rehearing denied 279 N.W. 18.

(12) Where provision of will making bequest to hospital to be used for construction of a new building or to be used to dedicate an existing building could not be literally complied with because of insufficiency of bequest to construct a new building and because the existing building named in will was dedicated, court would permit hospital to construct a new structure on the roof of one of its existing buildings, devoted to medical research and laboratory use, and to place on it an appropriate tablet of the origin of the gift.—In re Meyer's Estate, 3 N.Y.S.2d 117, 166 Misc. 712.

Discretion of court

(1) Equity has wide discretion in determining disposition of charitable trust fund after fulfillment of donor's specific objects, but must carry out donor's intention.—Snow v. President and Trustees of Bowdoin College, 175 A. 268, 133 Me. 195.

(2) The court has no discretion in applying the trust to what may seem the highest possible use, but must apply it to a purpose as nearly like the original scheme as may be devised.—Peter E. Leddy Post No. 19 of American Legion v. Roberts, N.J. Ch., 129 A. 148.

In the absence of any scheme judicially approved, the trustees of a charity may not make a cy pres application of the estate on their own authority, even though it is desirable,⁹¹ as the responsibility of applying the trust cy pres rests entirely on the court.⁹²

Surplus and deficiency. When the whole of a fund is given to a charitable foundation, a surplus subsequently arising, but not specifically disposed of, will be applied to the same or like charitable objects.⁹³ Where there was a fund donated for the relief of sufferers in a certain disaster, the surplus remaining after the payment of all claims has been held to revert to the donors if ascertainable, otherwise to the state;⁹⁴ but in another case it was held that the fund was properly turned over to an association for relieving those who might suffer in the future by reason of a similar disaster or for purposes closely related to the original purpose.⁹⁵

The insufficiency of the fund provided is no good reason for defeating a charitable gift or trust if the intention of the donor can to some extent be carried into effect,⁹⁶ as, under the doctrine of cy pres, the courts may authorize its employment to effect the general charitable purpose of the donor,⁹⁷ and this method will be followed rather than the

(1) Where testator left residuary estate in trust to expend income in establishing home for aged worthy poor in memory of deceased wife, but residuary estate was insufficient to accomplish purpose by prescribed method, doctrine of approximation was applicable, and income could be applied for shelter, support, and care of aged worthy poor.—Citizens & Manufacturers Nat. Bank v. Guilbert, 186 A. 564, 121 Conn. 520.

(2) Where will gave two thousand dollars for "founding and supporting a cattery . . . for the care of homeless animals and boarders," it was proper in view of insufficiency of fund to carry out testatrix' dominant purpose, to direct payment of income thereof to State Humane Society, subject, however, to restriction that money be used for care of animals.—Shannon v. Eno, 179 A. 479, 120 Conn. 77.

(3) Court, in administering charitable trust whereby remainder interest in realty was devised for "old ladies' home for worthy poor Protestant women over sixty years of age" residing in designated towns, properly applied doctrine of approximation, where bequest was insufficient to carry out testatrix' literal direction, but hospital to which income was given should be limited to use thereof for purposes designated by testatrix, and the judgment directing the transfer of property should direct that it be held by hospital in trust and not as part of its corporate funds.—Shannon v. Eno, supra.

(4) Chamberlain of city of New York holding fund subscribed by citizens in 1918 to build arch in memory of war dead, which fund was insufficient for such purpose, was held authorized to use money for war memorial playgrounds.—Berle v. Dawkins, 271 N.Y.S. 579, 150 Misc. 911.

(5) Under will devoting nearly all of estate worth more than two million dollars to charitable purposes and evidencing a general charitable purpose to benefit residents of particular town, direction that one hundred thousand dollars be set aside to establish and maintain a hospital in method of directing the trustees to hold the fund for accumulation in the hope that at some time, in the more or less distant future, they shall be able literally to carry out the purpose of the donor.⁹⁸ A resolution of the trustees or donees directing the investment of the fund given for a charitable purpose is not of itself sufficient to show the inadequacy of the fund for the carrying out of the purpose.⁹⁹

§ 53. Control, Supervision, and Visitation by Persons or Bodies Other than Court and Trustee

The control, supervision, and visitation by persons or bodies other than the court and the trustee is treated infra §§ 54–57. For later cases see Pocket Parts.

§ 54. — Visitation or Supervisory Powers in General

The visitatorial power to control charitable trusts and correct abuses is originally in the donor or founder, but may be imparted to others; and to all eleemosynary corporations a visitatorial power attaches as a necessary incident.

To all eleemosynary corporations a visitatorial power attaches as a necessary incident;¹ and in this connection it must be borne in mind that the words "charitable" and "eleemosynary" are practically synonymous, the latter designating technically a class of corporations organized for charitable purposes.² These corporations are composed of individuals, and they are subject to infirmities, and are liable not to carry out the purposes of the original giver of the funds. The law, therefore, from very early times has provided that there shall somewhere exist a power to visit and to inquire into, and correct all the irregularities and abuses, and to see that the charity is being applied according to the intention of the donor,³ and the common law in this regard is in force in most jurisdictions except so far as the same has been altered by constitution or statute.⁴

Where power rests. If the state is the only donor, then the power to appoint visitors and the visitatorial power vests in the state.⁵ However, if the charity is one resting solely on a private foundation, then the visitatorial power rests originally in the donor and at his death in his heirs,⁶ and he may impart that power to any person or persons he may see fit,⁷ and no formality or precise language is required in imparting such power, although the giving of the power of "supervision" is not equivalent to the giving of the power of "visitation." Furthermore, where the founder has thus appointed a general visitor, and for some cause the latter's function shall have been suspended, the power of visitation does not, ipso facto, return to the founder or his heirs, but is exercised through the courts of the land properly invoked.⁸

If the objects of the charity are not incorporated, but certain trustees are incorporated to manage the charity, the visitatorial power is deemed to belong to such trustees in their corporate capacity,⁹ unless there is an express reservation of that power to the founders or to others to whom it is assigned,¹⁰ and there is no other visitor.¹¹

Extent of power. The visitatorial power is a power to control and to arrest abuses;¹² it is not a power to revoke the gift, to change its uses, or to divest the rights of the parties entitled to the bounty.¹³ The extent of the visitatorial power is primarily dependent on the instrument creating or appointing the visitors,¹⁴ and where not amplified or restricted by the terms of the foundation the authority and power of visitors is that of a domestic tribunal, constituted by the founder of the charity, under the authority of law, to superintend the doings of the trustees, to correct mistakes, and to restrain all abuses of authority.¹⁵ Where the visitatorial feature was to be exercised by a separate board outside the trustees and was a constituent element of the institution, all gifts made thereafter to the institution are by implication, unless express provision is made to the contrary, made subject to the visitatorial power. While the trustees are to decide, in the first instance, all questions pertaining to the administration of the charity, the visitors have supervision and control of any decision of great magnitude.¹⁶

While a college or hospital chartered by the state, but founded and endowed by private benefaction, is a charity, it is also a private corporation;¹⁷ and in all such cases, as the duties of visi-

Accepting funds with visitatorial powers in others

St.1780 c 15, incorporating trustees of Phillips Academy and constituting them sole visitors of corporation, held not inconsistent with acceptance by them of funds for foundation of theological seminary, to be administered by them with visitatorial powers in others especially as St.1807 c 22, was special authorization to that general effect.—*Trustees of Andover Theological Seminary v. Procedure and competency of visitors. The number and time of visitations may be regulated by the instrument appointing or providing for visitors.¹⁹

A provision that no visitor shall hold office after reaching a certain age has been held directory and not mandatory, and is not a limitation on the power of the visitors, and the failure to conform to it has been held not fatal to the validity of acts performed, at least where the visitors constitute a corporation.²⁰

Where the visitors met for a purpose of which adequate notice had been given the trustees, and every formality so far as it concerned the trustees was observed, the latter cannot object to the meeting as a visitation; and objections to the place of the meeting, where not raised at the meeting, will not be considered. Approval by the visitors of one plan proposed by trustees has been held not to estop them from considering or examining a later plan differing materially from the first one, and the fact that the visitors did not summon before them the other party to the contract for hearing on the validity thereof has been held not to affect the jurisdiction of the visitors. A decision to authorize counsel to take steps fully to present the question to the court has been held not a determination of the merits of action taken by the trustees.²¹

Review by court of exercise of power by visitors is treated supra § 49.

§ 55. — Boards and Commissions

In some states a board of charities is provided for, and the institutions subject to its visitation depend on the terms of the constitution or statute and the construction placed thereon by the courts.

The constitutions and statutes of some states create a state board of charities and invest it with the power and duty of visitation and inspection. The institutions subject to the jurisdiction of the board are such as come within the terms of the constitution and statutes and the construction placed thereon by the courts.²² Under some constitutional or statutory provisions, it has been held that the

Adjournment from time to time

In view of powers conferred on visitors of Andover Theological Seminary by statutes thereof requiring at least one visitation each year, where annual visitation was fixed for November, 1921, it was held that such meeting could be kept alive by successive adjournments until June 15, 1922.—Trustees of Andover Theological Seminary v. Visitors of Theological Inst. in Phillips Academy in Andover, supra.

Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children

The institutions subject to the jurisdiction of the board are those in which indigent persons are supported by taxation, and do not include such eleemosynary institutions as the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, although its work is aided by an allowance from city funds which relieves the police department.—People v. New York S. P. C. C., 55 N.E. 1063, 161 N.Y. 233, reargument denied 56 N.E. 1004, 162 N.Y. 429, and reversing 59 N.Y.S. 953, 42 App.Div. 83—New York Juvenile Guardian Soc. v. Roosevelt, 7 Daly 188.

The former practice under the statute of 43 Elizabeth requiring a commissioner to inquire into and to board's power is not limited to mere observation, and it may require the officials or trustees to exhibit records and make reports.²³

Where provided for in the constitution, the right of visitation has been held placed therein so that it could not be taken away except by express approval of the people, and, if it cannot be taken away, neither can it be essentially impaired.²⁴

§ 56. — Municipality

A statute conferring authority on a municipality to become a trustee has been held not to give it supervisory jurisdiction over funds intrusted to other trustees notwithstanding such funds may be used to help or hinder the performance of the duties of the municipality.

While, as shown supra § 33, a municipality may generally be a trustee of a charitable trust, a statute conferring capacity on a municipality to become a trustee of a charitable trust on appointment has been held not to give the city supervisory jurisdiction over funds intrusted to other trustees, although such funds may be so administered as to help or to hinder the performance of the duties of the municipality.²⁵

In general, the nature of the suit is largely controlling as to the person who may be entitled to sue with reference to the administration or enforcement of a charity.

Before a court of equity is entitled to interfere in the administration and enforcement of a charitable trust, its jurisdiction must be invoked by some one having the right to institute an action or proceeding for that purpose;³⁰ the court cannot act on its own volition,³¹ although in an action to agement for town hospital different from that established by completed gift as condition thereto was held invalid.—Adams v. Plunkett, 175 N.E. 60, 274 Mass. 453.

have a legacy in trust declared void, it has been held that courts of equity will of their own initiative find out and discover the purpose for which the trust was created.³²

Some authorities have arranged in four classes the principal cases in which litigation arises respecting charity property: (1) There may be wrongs to be redressed or relief to be sought, for which actions at law or suits in equity might lie, if the charity estates or funds were the private property of the trustees of the charity. In such cases, ordinary actions or suits are maintainable by the trustees, as shown infra this section, subdivision c. (2) A testator may make a charitable disposition by his will, and questions will be raised as to its validity or the proper means of carrying it out; in such cases, the questions can be considered in an ordinary suit to administer his estate, or, occasionally, can be considered in other suits which come before the court under other branches of its jurisdiction. (3) The trustees of the charity may improperly sell or lease the property to some person having a knowledge of the trust. (4) The trustees of the charity may apply the property to wrong objects or appropriate it to their own use.³³ While, as to the third and fourth classes of cases, there was for a time a doubt as to who was the proper person to bring a suit, at length, however, it came to be established that the attorney general was the proper person, as shown infra this section, subdivision b.

b. Attorney General

Ordinarily, the attorney general has a preclusive right to institute proper proceedings to prevent a misuse of property devoted to a public charity.

It has been generally held, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, that the attorney general has a preclusive right to prevent a misuse of property devoted to a public charity and to institute proper proceedings to protect the estate.³⁴ However, the charities which the attorney general can sue to enforce or conserve must be charities of a character so public as to interest "the entire public,"³⁵ and in order for the attorney general to be

- Cy pres doctrine
- State, not church, under auspices of which college to which endowment was made was founded, may, through agency of court of equity, propose scheme for administration of endowment fund, under cy pres rule, and state attorney general should institute, or be made defendant in suit to have college endowment fund administered under cy pres doctrine.—Schell v. Leander Clark College, D.C.Iowa, 10 F.2d 542.
- Certificate of authority
- The attorney general's certificate of authority for inquiry by state, on behalf of public charity as trust beneficiary, into acts of executors and testamentary trustees, as in selling trust property under power conferred by will, is properly requisite. While attorney general may be justified in authorizing inquiry by state into their acts, mere dissatisfaction with result of sale or ill-founded suspicion would not justify him in approving proceeding for inquiry by state.—State ex rel. Daniel v. Strong, 192 S.E. 671, 185 S.C. 27.

- 11 C.J. p 367 note 45.
- Fund that may or may not be used for charity
- Where a fund or property is so given that it may or may not be used for charity, or may or may not be used for a charitable object of a public character, without violating the directions of the will, case is not one for enforcing the gift as a "pub-alone entitled to enforce a charitable trust, there must be some benefit to be conferred upon, or duty to be performed toward, either the public at large or some part thereof, or an indefinite class of persons.³⁶

Trustees may generally sue to obtain or protect the subject matter of the trust.

When shown to be such, the trustees of a charity may sue to obtain or protect the subject matter of the trust;³⁷ or to obtain instructions,³⁸ and, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, proceedings for the sale of property belonging to the trust may be instituted by them, rather than by the attorney general,³⁹ provided the latter is made a party defendant, as shown infra § 62. Also, sometimes by virtue of statutory provisions, the trustees may appeal to the courts from a determination or decree of visitors.⁴⁰

Acting trustees may file a bill in equity in their own names for the transfer of a public charity to new trustees, making the attorney general a defendant.⁴¹

Secondary trustee. Where a trust for a charitable purpose in a city was created, it has been held that the city becomes a secondary trustee and has a primary right of action to enforce the provisions of the trust.⁴²

Trustee of fund payable to another. Trustees under a will giving the income thereof to a charity created under the will of another, having a duty only to pay the income received in accordance with the terms of the will, have been held without right to maintain a bill to enjoin an alleged unlawful conduct thereof.⁴³

d. Other Persons

To entitle a private person to prosecute a suit in regard to the administration and enforcement of a charitable trust, he must be a party to the contract of donation, or a representative of such party, or be interested personally and individually as a beneficiary rather than as a taxpayer or member of the community, in the uses to which the property is to be put.

One not interested directly in the administration of a charitable trust cannot maintain a legal proceeding for an accounting or the control of the administration of said charity,⁴⁴ at least in the absence of a showing of fraud on the part of those who may institute such proceedings,⁴⁵ and the fact that the attorney general is joined as a party defendant is of no import.⁴⁶ To entitle a private individual to prosecute a bill in regard to the administration and enforcement of a charitable trust, he must be a party to the contract of donation, or the representative of such party, or be interested, personally and individually, as a beneficiary rather than as a taxpayer or a member of the community, in the uses to which the property is to be put.⁴⁷

In general, he must be a trustee, or cestui que trust, or have some reversionary interest in the trust fund.⁴⁸

Donor or heirs. While, under some circumstances, the donor,⁴⁹ or his heirs,⁵⁰ or any beneficiary, having an interest in the subject of the gift,⁵¹ has the right to enforce, by legal proceedings, a faithful execution of the beneficent objects of the founder of the charity; where the donor has effectually passed out of himself all interest in the fund devoted to a charity, neither he, nor those claiming under him, have any standing in a court of equity as to its disposition and control.⁵²

Contributors to fund. As a general rule, the contributors to a fund creating a trust for mere charitable purposes cannot call the trustees of that fund to an account for a misapplication of the fund or any other breach of the trust.⁵³ There must be something peculiar in the transaction, beyond the mere fact of contribution, to give a contributor to a charitable fund a foothold in court to enable him to question the disposition of the fund.⁵⁴

Directors, managers, or employees of charity

The directors, managers, superintendents, or other agents or employees engaged in the administration of a public charity have no right to call on a court of equity to compel the continued maintenance and operation of the charity in order that they may continue to render the services necessary for such maintenance and operation.—Barker v. the aid of the court against an improper use of the trust.⁵⁶

A localized or grouped charity may be enforced by a class suit,⁵⁷ and if the terms defining a charitable trust are such that it is possible to ascertain definite persons and institutions as the recipients of its benefits, such definitely ascertained persons have a status which entitles them to sue without the intermediation of the attorney general.⁵⁸ Thus, the members of a church have a standing in court to compel a board of trustees to administer a fund in accordance with the will which left it to enable such board to take care of the poor of the church.⁵⁹

§ 59. Actions

Questions relating to actions involving charitable trusts are considered infra §§ 60-65. For later cases consult Pocket Parts.

§ 60. — Right of Action and Form of Remedy

On violation of a trust, action may be brought to enforce the trust, or to remove the trustee.

While, in some jurisdictions, the only remedy for a violation of a trust is an action to enforce the trust,⁶⁰ in others a suit to have the trustee removed is a proper remedy to correct an abuse of trust.⁶¹ Also, in some states, provision is made by statute for the filing of an information on the failure to make due application of funds given to public charities.⁶² Notwithstanding a statute referring to charities contemplates a summary petition by the trustees for leave to sell land, the trustees may proceed by action;⁶³ but a general statutory action for the determination of the right and title to land of a party in or out of possession is not a proper action in which to determine the questions of the right of the trustees of a charitable trust to sell the trust property and the interest of the grantor's heirs,⁶⁴ and a statute authorizing a summary inquiry into an application for the sale of land given to a charitable corporation has been held not to contemplate an adjudication of a disputed legal title.⁶⁵

A beneficiary may not sue with respect to the trust property without first performing conditions precedent;⁶⁶ and in the absence of any allegation of mismanagement or misapplication of the trust funds, the trustees cannot be required to account for the funds in their hands prior to the time fixed for devoting such funds to the uses of the trust.⁶⁷

§ 61. — Laches, Limitations, and Defenses

Lapse of time before suit is brought will be given consideration and weight according to the circumstances of the particular case.

Although laches and limitations constitute no absolute bar to suits pertaining to charitable trusts, lapse of time will be given consideration and weight according to the circumstances of the particular case.⁶⁸

§ 62. — Parties

- a. In general
- b. Attorney general
- c. Heirs
- d. Trustees

a. In General

All persons interested should be made parties to a proceeding involving a charitable trust.

In accordance with the general principle of equity all persons interested should be made parties to proceedings involving a charitable trust.⁶⁹ In a suit involving the validity of a will which directs the executor to dispose of the residuary estate according to his judgment for good and charitable purposes, he may not join as parties religious, educational, and charitable organizations which he has selected to receive the gift, on his mere allegation that they are such beneficiaries as the testator had in mind and intended as the recipients of the gift.⁷⁰ Also, where the title to church property is in a corporation and not in the church members, the members are not necessary parties to a bill to execute cy pres the trust in the church property.⁷¹

11 C.J. p 368 note 73.

On distribution by court

Necessary parties are testator's administrator, heirs and next of kin or representatives, attorney general, and any charities having vested rights. Donees nominated by deceased executor, as trustee, and by administrator, and proposed under scheme to be framed by court, are proper parties.—Kirwin v. Attorney General, 175 N.E. 164, 275 Mass. 34.

Purchaser of trust property

In suit between heirs and trustees, involving ownership of property incorporated in a testamentary charitable trust, to have title to property sold by original trustees determined, the purchaser is a necessary party to the suit, as well as attorney general or prosecuting attorney of county where case was tried.—Wemme v. First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Portland, 237 P. 674, 115 Or. 281.

Representation

Where the beneficiaries of a charitable trust are not named, or are uncertain individuals of an unascertained class so that no one of them can sue or be sued respecting the trust, no one can appear for them except parens patriæ or some official to whom that prerogative has been delegated.—Ewell v. Sneed, 191 S.W. 131, 136 Tenn. 602, 5 A.L.R. 303.

However, where a will gave property, on the happening of a certain contingency, in trust to establish a college under the direction of the Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese, the bishop is a proper party to a proceeding to prevent the violation of the trust by distributing the property contrary to the will;⁷² and where property was given to a trustee to be devoted to a charitable purpose in a city, such city has been held to have the right to be a party to an action concerning the validity of the gift.⁷³

The relators in an information by the attorney general are not parties to the suit; they have no interest in the matter for which they seek relief; they cannot be heard by counsel nor in person. They are important to the proceedings merely that there may be somebody responsible for costs in case it should appear that the information is unfounded.⁷⁴

Ordinarily, the attorney general is not only a proper, but a necessary, party to proceedings affecting the validity, administration or enforcement of a charitable trust.

The attorney general is a proper, and generally a necessary, party to proceedings affecting the validity, administration, or enforcement of a charitable trust,⁷⁵ and when the public is the beneficiary of a charitable trust, the attorney general has been held the only necessary party to a suit instituted by the trustees with relation to their powers and duties.⁷⁶ However, where the recipients of the trust are definite persons and institutions and suit is brought by them, the attorney general has been held not a necessary,⁷⁷ nor a proper,⁷⁸ party; and a suit brought to remove trustees has been held not to involve interests of the public so essentially as to require the attorney general to be made a party, even though relating to a public charitable trust.⁷⁹ Also, such officer has been held not a necessary party to a bill for the instructions of the court as to the administration of a public charity, when the gift is in the hands of trustees charged specifically by the donor with its management for the cestui que trust, and no charges of waste or mismanagement are made against them;⁸⁰ and where a donation was made to two corporations on a condition, the attorney general has been held not a necessary party in a suit by the one corporation against the other to enforce such condition.⁸¹

The attorney general may file an information either of his own motion or on the relation of any party concerned;⁸² or he may come in by intervention or be brought in by amendment, when necessary.⁸³ In case he should choose so to do, he should be given the right to take charge and control of that portion of the litigation which relates to the public right;⁸⁴ but when the relator has the chief interest in the suit, the attorney general, after consenting to the use of the name of the state on his behalf, cannot withdraw and terminate the suit to his prejudice.⁸⁵

Where the heirs have no possible interest in the trust property, they are not necessary or proper parties.

In a suit by the trustees of a public trust for directions as to the execution of the trust, the heirs at law or the next of kin of the donor are not necessary parties defendant, in view of the fact that no right of reverter arises on the breach or violation of a public trust.⁸⁶ Where, however, the heirs have a possible interest in the trust property, as where the inquiry is whether a good charitable trust was created, they are necessary parties.⁸⁷

As to whether all the trustees are necessary parties depends on the nature of the suit and the relief asked.

Where, in a suit to determine the disposition of the proceeds of a sale of public charitable trust property, all the trustees are joined, the proper parties are before the court.⁸⁸ As to whether all the trustees are necessary parties, the nature of the suit and the relief asked must be looked to, it being

Suit for directions or construction of trust instrument

Where a bill is filed by the trustee of a public charity, seeking directions as to the mode of executing their trust or for a construction of the trust instrument, the attorney general is a proper party defendant as representing the public interest. held in some cases that they are all necessary parties,⁸⁹ and in others that it is not necessary to join all the trustees.⁹⁰ A trustee whose only duty is to pay over the income of a fund to a charitable corporation created by a third person has been held not a proper party to a suit by such corporation for instructions.⁹¹

§ 63. — Pleading and Evidence

In order to obtain the relief asked, the pleadings must contain appropriate allegations and must be supported by proof.

In a suit to compel the proper application of charitable trust funds, or the execution of the trust in a certain way, it is necessary and sufficient for the bill, complaint, or petition to contain the allegations necessary and appropriate to a suit of that kind.⁹² In an action to declare a trust void, it is insufficient to allege that the objects of the trust are not being carried out owing to mismanagement; there must be an allegation and proof that the purposes cannot be carried out by proper management.⁹³

Evidence. In accordance with general rules, the burden of proof is on the party claiming that a charitable gift has been forfeited,⁹⁴ or that the charity is not being conducted within the authorized purposes thereof.⁹⁵

Any competent evidence is admissible where it is relevant and material to the issues in a suit concerning a charitable trust.⁹⁶

In accordance with general rules, a preponderance of evidence is generally necessary and sufficient to establish the facts in issue.⁹⁷

§ 64. — Trial, Judgment, and Review

The court will grant relief according to the case made as it appears on the whole record, but where the trustee has not been remiss in his duties he will not be interfered with or harassed by court orders.

A proceeding to enforce an intended gift to a public charity will be determined on equitable principles and the rules applicable to charitable gifts;⁹⁸ and, generally, the court will grant relief according to the case made, as it appears on the whole record.⁹⁹ Where it appears that complainants have no direct interest in the enforcement of the trust,

Relief granted in particular cases

(1) Petition to vacate decree allowing testamentary trustee to remove charitable institution from their bill will be dismissed,¹ and if no public interest appears, the relator cannot have the information retained as a simple bill in equity.² The court will make the proper orders to secure the just administration of the trust, whether the pleadings are formal or informal, or pray for the relief granted, or for different relief,³ and, where it is shown that the trustee has wasted, misemployed, or mismanaged the trust fund, the decree in an action against him should direct the specific performance of the trust, and not the return of the fund to the donor or his heirs.⁴ However, where there is no proof that the trustee is remiss in his duty, he should not be interfered with or harassed by court orders.⁵

Where property limited to a charitable use has been withheld by one charitable corporation from another, and no injury to the property is shown, only nominal damages are recoverable.⁶

The judgment or decree must be full and complete,⁷ and must not be indefinite.⁸

§ 65. — Costs

Except as regulated by statute, in actions looking forward to the enforcement of the trust, the expenses of the suit are generally paid out of the trust estate.

Where statutes exist, the right to recover, and the liability for, costs are dependent thereon.⁹ In actions looking toward the enforcement of the trust, such as those for instructions or for construction of the trust instrument, etc., the expenses of the suit, including those of the defeated party, are generally paid out of the trust estate,¹⁰ but in

(5) In a suit to enforce a legacy, where an action was pending by a charitable corporation to recover its property sold on foreclosure, in view of the fact that, if it recovered its property, its charitable purpose would again become effective, and it would be entitled to receive the legacy for charitable purposes, but if it failed in the action, the object of the bequest could not be carried out, the bequest should be paid to the county treasurer, pending the determination of the action.—In re Mills' Will, 200 N.Y.S. 701, 121 Misc. 147.

In a suit to construe an instrument creating a charitable trust, the testator's heirs, who intervened as necessary parties to a full determination of the cause, doing nothing to hinder, delay, or obstruct the

those jurisdictions where the theory of apportionment of the expenses of litigation does not prevail, defendants have been held not entitled to recover their costs from such fund.¹¹ In an unsuccessful action to set aside and destroy a charitable trust, the defeated party has been held not entitled to costs to be paid by the trustees or out of the trust estate;¹² and a trustee, acting in good faith, should not be charged with the costs of a proceeding to determine which of two claimants was entitled to the income of the trust fund.¹³

On the removal of the trustee of a charitable relief fund for fraud or malfeasance, he may be allowed expenses incurred with the approval of its board of control, but not commissions as trustee, or counsel fees, or other disbursements made in resisting such board's claim to the trust fund.¹⁴

Where the case presented by a relator is without merit, he is liable for the costs.¹⁵

VIII. MODIFICATION AND TERMINATION

§ 66. In General

Although the intention of the donor is controlling, the courts will readily attribute an intention to the donor that charitable gifts should be as permanent and perpetual as any human institution can be.

Every conveyance in the nature of a gift to a charitable use, once vested, can never cease during the period, perpetual or otherwise, for which it was intended to subsist,¹⁶ and as charities are established for objects of public, general, and lasting benefit, the courts will readily attribute an intention to the donor that they should be as permanent and perpetual as any human institution can be, whether so declared in terms or not.¹⁷ While a charitable gift for religious purposes may be made originally for a limited period or during the pleasure of the donor,¹⁸ the fact that the trust empowered the trustees to select the beneficiaries is no indication whatever that the charity was limited to their lifetime.¹⁹

The courts will not declare charitable gifts to be forfeited in doubtful cases,²⁰ and, generally speaking, a charitable devise or bequest does not lapse or fail where there is a beneficiary in being at the time of the testator's death and there are no conditions subsequent or precedent;²¹ nor does a charitable trust fail where it is not repugnant to law or contrary to public policy and its purposes have not been accomplished.²² The duration of a charitable trust, evidenced by a written instrument, is usually governed by the donor's intention as expressed therein,²³ and the court will not order the termination of a charitable trust and the transfer of the assets to the beneficiary where to do so would de-speedy and orderly disposition of the cause, were entitled to reasonable attorney's fees from the trust fund.—City of St. Louis v. McAllister, 257 S.W. 425, 302 Mo. 152.

Attorney's fees

An allowance for attorney's fees out of the fund in the hands of the court is dependent on the right of their client to such fees. If the client is not entitled to costs, including attorney's fees, no allowance can be made directly to the attorney.—Wemme v. First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Portland, 223 P. 250, 110 Or. 179, denying motion to recall mandate 219 P. 618, 110 Or. 179.

Amount allowed

Where, but for active labors of attorneys, principal object of a charitable trust would have been disregarded, and resources of decedent's estate, amounting to between four hundred thousand dollars and five hundred thousand dollars, were restored to original trust largely through their efforts, attorneys were entitled to fee of fifteen thousand dollars and one thousand dollars for expenses necessarily incurred.—*Wemme v. feat the intention of the donor,²⁴ even at the request of both the trustee and the cestui que trust.²⁵ If the donor of a trust has expressed a general charitable intent, the trust must be continued within the limits of its general purpose and does not cease when a particular objective has been accomplished.²⁶ Where such is the evident intent of the donor, a bequest to a charitable corporation does not lapse because the corporation has discontinued part of its charity work,²⁷ or because of a change in the ownership or management thereof,²⁸ and, in the absence of controlling words or clear inference in a will, a devise or bequest to a state controlled institution of learning will not lapse by reason of a change of public policy as to coeducation,²⁹ nor will it lapse by the technical abolishment of the institution, where there is prompt reestablishment before action is taken by the heirs.³⁰ In the absence of an intention to the contrary expressed in the instrument creating the trust,³¹ the consolidation,³² merger,³³ or union³⁴ of the beneficiary of the trust with another similar institution will not terminate a charitable trust. Although a charitable trust has been held to fail when the beneficiary ceases to exist,³⁵ it has also been held that a bequest expressing a general charitable intent will not fail on the bankruptcy of the beneficiary,³⁶ but that the situation is one calling for the exercise of the cy pres doctrine, as already considered in § 52.

It is not within the power of a state legislature to terminate a charitable trust in the absence of constitutional authorization;³⁷ neither can a trustee who has accepted such a trust defeat it by renunciation or abandonment,³⁸ and the donor cannot withdraw a gift to charity.³⁹ Also, in the absence of a reserved power, the donor and donees cannot alter or terminate a charitable trust.⁴⁰

Under influence, fraud, and mistake. A grant for charitable purposes may be set aside for undue influence, like other conveyances; but this will be done only when the donor has clearly been deceived or deprived of free agency.⁴³ Such a grant may be set aside for mistake as well as for fraud; but this does not enable such a charitable institution as an orphan asylum which has received an orphan gratuitously to revoke the charity on ascertaining that the orphan has a small pension from the government.⁴⁴ version, a charitable gift ordinarily does not revert to the donor or his heirs.

In the absence of an express provision for reverter,⁴⁵ a gift, grant, or conveyance of property for a charitable use ordinarily does not revert to the donor or his heirs,⁴⁶ and an implied condition against reverter is raised,⁴⁷ the absence of such a provision being evidence that the donor did not intend that the estate should revert while the carrying out of his general purpose is practicable.⁴⁸ So, if a perpetual trust is created for a particular charitable purpose, which has taken effect in the first instance, there is no reverter, regardless of a subsequent failure of the purpose thereof,⁴⁹ abandonment by nonuser,⁵⁰ or violation of the terms thereof,⁵¹ unless there is a limitation or condition to the contrary in the grant or conveyance.⁵² Likewise, in the absence of statute or an express provision to the contrary, the trust will not fail or the property revert because of the trustees' abandonment or abuse thereof,⁵³ or because some of the benefition named as legatee in will authorized corporate officers' release of legacy.—In re Kulka's Estate, supra.

aries have ceased to exist.⁵⁴ If the estate is misapplied, the fitting remedy is not its forfeiture to the grantor or his heirs, but a proceeding on the equity side of the court to enforce the trust.⁵⁵

On the other hand, the fund will revert to the donor's estate or to his heirs at law even in the absence of an express provision therefor, if it is clear that he had no general charitable purpose in mind but instead contemplated the carrying out of one or more particular purposes which are impossible of fulfillment,⁵⁶ as where the beneficiaries have failed to accept it,⁵⁷ or where the particular institution he intended to aid no longer exists.⁵⁸ Accordingly, in gifts or bequests for specific rather than general charitable purposes,⁵⁹ or in charitable bequests to corporations,⁶⁰ there may be a possibility of reverter to the heirs of the donor. However, where there is no reservation of a power of revocation or provision for reverter, the trust may be extinguished so as to revert to the donor or his heirs only when there has been an entire failure of object or purpose,⁶¹ there being no reverter when the gift can be applied to a similar charity,⁶² under the doctrine of cy pres, considered above in § 52. If the fund provided by the donor is insufficient to carry out his purpose, and enough is not secured from other sources, his gift has been held to revert to him;⁶³ but this holding is contrary to the general rule that a charitable gift will not be allowed to fail merely on account of the inadequacy of the fund provided, as the fund may be applied under the doctrine of cy pres, discussed above in § 52.

forfeiture and reversion on its breach is binding on a grantee who accepts the trust,⁶⁴ and where there is a provision for forfeiture⁶⁵ and reverter⁶⁶ the trustees' legal title endures only as long as does the use that it was created to protect.⁶⁷ The mere fact that an honest effort has been made to comply with the condition will not excuse a failure to do so.⁶⁸ Of course, the prescribed condition must be violated before there can be a reverter.⁶⁹ Where such a condition is expressed the court will give it a reasonable construction⁷⁰ and will not permit the heirs to profit by their conduct in causing a breach thereof.⁷¹ However, the court will not infer such a condition where it is not expressed or necessarily implied;⁷² neither will the court infer that, where there is a condition coupled with a reverter, such reverter is to be construed as coupled with another and different condition in the same instrument.⁷³

If a statute so provides, in case the object of a testamentary charitable trust ceases to exist, the property reverts to the heirs at law and next of kin of the testator.⁷⁴

IX. CHARITABLE CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS

§ 68. Incorporation and Organization

Charities or their managing officers may be incorporated under statutes conferring the requisite authority and on compliance with their provisions.

Incorporation of a charity, on the theory that the instrument setting it up so requires, may not be permitted in the absence of language fairly showing such intent.⁷⁵ Under appropriate statutory authority, a voluntary association may be incorporated as a charitable corporation,⁷⁶ but a statute authorizing the incorporation of charitable societies obviously does not, however, authorize the incorporation of a noncharitable society.⁷⁷

Where the donor of a gift to a charitable association, provided it is incorporated, does not specify the time within which incorporation must be completed nor impose a forfeiture of the gift for failure to incorporate within a specified time, and no

Where donor established a trust fund of certain stock, dividends of which were to be prorated annually among all common school children in county, and trustee paid to county superintendent each year from such fund two cents per pupil which went to pay teachers of county, this method of handling income from trust fund was not an intentional diversion, and hence there was no reverter under provision of trust that, should dividends be intentionally diverted, stock should be returned to donor or his legal representative.—Trustees Stewart Common School injury prejudicial to other interested parties results from delay in filing a certificate of incorporation, such delay may not preclude acquisition of such gift by the association.⁷⁸

Incorporation of managing officers. Under appropriate statutory provisions, the managing officers of a charity may be incorporated.⁷⁹ A gift to trustees, with the injunction that they may constitute themselves a body corporate for the purpose of carrying into effect the charitable purposes of the donor by means of a perpetual trust, requires that existing trustees of a charity be organized into a body corporate.⁸⁰ Incorporation of the managing officers of a charity may not, however, affect either their powers or responsibilities.⁸¹

Compliance with statute. In accordance with general rules, see the C.J.S. title Corporations § 45, also 14 C.J. p 119 note 63, substantial compliance with statutes authorizing the incorporation of charitable organizations is sufficient to bring the corporation into legal existence,⁸² and a de facto corporation exists where there has been a bona fide attempt to incorporate under their provisions followed by user or exercise of corporate powers.⁸³ In order to constitute a charitable corporation de jure, however, all statutory requirements must be complied with,⁸⁴ unless they are directory only.⁸⁵ Informalities or irregularities in the incorporation of a charitable corporation may be waived or cured by a subsequent legislative recognition of the existence of the corporation.⁸⁶

It is unnecessary, in the incorporation of a charitable society, that the ultimate recipients of the bounty of the society be precisely defined in the certificate of incorporation.—*Smith v. Objects and purposes

(1) Under a statute requiring certificates of incorporation for proposed charitable corporations be approved by a justice of a specified court, it is held to be his duty to determine whether the objects and purposes of such corporations are in accord with public policy. A proposed corporation for purposes of facilitating entry of German Jewish children into United States, aiding them, preventing them from becoming public charges, and placing them in foster homes or institutions, has proper objects consistent with public policy. That the certificate states that one of the purposes of the proposed corporation is to give proper bonds or undertakings will not warrant the withholding of such approval where the giving of such instruments are necessary to the accomplishing of the main charitable purpose of the proposed corporation.—In re German Jewish Children's Aid, 272 N.Y.S. 540, 151 Misc. 834.

(2) Where the approval of a specified state board is indorsed on the original certificate of incorporation as required by the incorporating statute, that a certificate of extension of corporate purposes, not specified in such statute, is not accompanied by the approval of such board does not justify a refusal to file such certificate.—*No. 17 Beekman Place v. Consolidation. Under a statute so providing there may be a consolidation of charitable corporations, and it is no objection to consolidation that the corporations involved pursue different methods to accomplish their charitable objects, where the statute only requires that such organizations be charitable; nor is it any objection to consolidation that certain donations have been given to the respective organizations with certain conditions of reverter which will be lost to the united body on consolidation.⁹⁰

§ 71. Officers and Agents

- a. Selection, appointment, supervision, and removal
- b. Authority, rights, duties, and liabilities

a. Selection, Appointment, Supervision, and Removal

The selection and appointment of officers and agents of a charity are determined by the intent of the donor, although such officers or agents are accountable to the court and subject to removal by it or by an appropriate state body.

As in the case of trustees, see supra §§ 24–26, it is the intent of the donor that, in the first instance, determines who shall be selected or appointed as the managing officers of the charity set up by him, and where changed conditions, not foreseen or provided against by the donor, renders the selection of some of such officers, as directed by the donor, impossible, their selection is to be determined by the courts.⁹⁴ On the other hand, the intrusion of a court into the affairs of officers in holding an election has been held to be improper and to render such election invalid.⁹⁵ The officers of a charitable organization are, however, accountable to the court and, after hearing, subject to removal by the court,⁹⁶ and may also be subject to removal by an appropriate state body.⁹⁷

b. Authority, Rights, Duties, and Liabilities

Ordinary strict rules concerning the authority of fiduciaries apply to officers and agents of charitable organizations.

The officers and agents of a charity are bound by the ordinary strict rules concerning the authority of a fiduciary,⁹⁸ and persons dealing with them must, at their peril, take notice of the powers granted the corporation by its articles of incorporation.⁹⁹ It may not, however, be improper for an officer of a charity to deal with it in a manner which happens to be of financial advantage to himself, provided the charity is not subjected to any expense by reason of the transaction.¹

The officers and agents of charitable institutions may be individually liable for injury resulting from the acts or conduct of such officers and agents,² and particularly as regards an injury which results from their misfeasance as distinguished from non-feasance.³ By statute in New York the liability of directors of charitable corporations is the same in kind as that of stockholders, under the various laws governing corporations, and differs only in degree;⁴ and a court of law is primarily the proper forum for the enforcement of this liability, a resort to equity being permissible only where the remedy at law is inadequate or will lead to inequitable results.⁵

Compensation. The officers of a charity are properly entitled to such compensation as is provided for by the donor.⁶ On the other hand, in the absence of any declared intent on the part of a testator that an agent of a charitable association shall share in a bequest to the association, he may not be entitled to compensation from such bequest, notwithstanding the existence of a contract between the association and such agent promising to pay him a certain portion of money secured by his personal solicitations.⁷ This is particularly true in the absence of any showing that the testator ever knew of the terms of the contract between the agent and the association.⁸ Where a charitable institution is subject to legislation providing for its officers, a person appointed to an office not provided for by law is not entitled to any compensation;⁹ and a statute providing that no trustee of a charitable corporation shall be entitled to compensation except under a special employment by the board of trustees prohibits a trustee from receiving compensation for services in the rendition of which the trustees have simply acquiesced.¹⁰

Mode of determining

Where the donor and creator of a

Delegation of power. The officers of a charitable organization may delegate their powers involving nothing more than incidental and administrative details.¹¹ Those powers which involve the performance of a personal duty on the part of an officer cannot, however, be delegated.¹²

Treasurer. The treasurer of a charitable corporation has only the powers expressly conferred upon him by the directors.¹³

City treasurer. A city treasurer who is under the by-laws of a charity ex officio the custodian of its funds, and to whom the treasurer of the charity has transmitted power of attorney to cancel certificates of deposit and to collect the amount due thereon, is bound by the vote of the managing officers of the charity to convert into cash certain certificates held by the charity and to reinvest the proceeds as directed.¹⁴

§ 72. Powers

Charitable corporations have only such powers as are expressly or impliedly conferred by their charters.

As in the case of other corporations, see the C.J.S. title Corporations § 935, also 14 C.J. p 246 note 69, a charitable corporation has no powers except such as are expressly or impliedly conferred by its charter and amendments thereto,¹⁵ although in construing the charter, to determine what powers are possessed by a particular charitable corporation, restrictive words are to be read in conjunction with language stating wider corporate purposes, in order to uphold the particular power which is claimed.¹⁶ Under the doctrine of implied powers, see the C.J.S. title Corporations § 945, also 14 C.J. p 252 note 11, which has been expressly held to be applicable to charitable corporations,¹⁷ charitable corporations may, as will be observed hereafter in this section, exercise such powers as are incidental to the corporate existence of such corporations, as well as powers implied from those expressly granted. For example, in a proper case a charitable corporation has power to enter into, and bind itself by, contract,¹⁸ and, when acting as the agent of an

Care of child

A hospital operated as a charity has power to contract with an infant and his parents to care for the child and safeguard him while his mother is undergoing treatment.—Roche v. St. John's Riverside Hospital supra.

Subscription contracts

A charitable corporation has power to accept subscription contracts to provide money for carrying out the charitable purposes of the enterprise.—Brooke v. Kennedy, 153 S.E. 4, 172 Ga. 461.

Undertakings for Jewish children from Germany

When necessary to accomplish the main purpose of a charitable corporation to provide an asylum for Jewish children from Germany, the corporation has power to enter into undertakings as a guaranty that such other, a charitable corporation may bind its principal by contract.¹⁹

A charitable corporation may, likewise, take and receive such gifts and bequests as are within the purposes of the corporation as described in its charter or articles of association.²⁰ This is particularly true as regards gifts of money to be applied to the corporation's charitable purposes,²¹ and donations of real estate to be used for any of the expressed purposes of the corporation.²² That the incorporators stated in the charter of the corporation that it had neither capital stock nor assets does not militate against the existence of the corporation's power to receive a donation of real estate; nor is it any reason to deny to a charitable corporation the power to accept title in perpetuity to real estate that the corporation's charter is for a specified number of years, since the corporation, if it has not disposed of its interest prior to the time the existing charter expires, may obtain a new charter, and, if the corporation has failed so to do, it is time enough for the heirs of the donor to claim a reversion of the property.²³ It is also within the power of a charitable corporation to convey its real property,²⁴ particularly where it becomes necessary to do so in order to perpetuate the charitable purposes of the corporation.²⁵ Nevertheless, it has been observed that the power of a charitable corporation to take and to sell real estate is purely incidental in the prosecution of its main purpose.²⁶

Under the general implied power of corporations generally to borrow money, when necessary to carry out the purposes of their organization, see the C.J. S. title Corporations § 1144, also 14 a C.J. p 605 note 37, charitable corporations may borrow.²⁷ Under the provisions of a particular statute creating a charitable corporation with specified powers subject to such orders as a court of equity should make, it was held that the execution of a mortgage to secure a loan, when approved by an equity court was within the power of the corporation.²⁸

As in the case of trustees of charitable trusts generally, see supra § 47, a charitable corporation or association holding property or funds in trust for a charitable use is without power to divert them from the purpose for which they were given.²⁹

Thus, a charitable corporation has no power to divert its charitable trust funds toward a private individual, who is not an object of charity, notwithstanding services performed by him in procuring gifts to the corporation;³⁰ but the use which a charitable corporation may make of any part of its funds, as long as it does not violate the terms of the instrument under which it has received it, cannot render such use illegal, if the use is a charitable one.³¹ For example, when not restricted by the terms of a gift or the purposes for which a charitable corporation was organized, it may apply its funds toward the acquisition of real as well as personal property.³² So, a charitable institution has power to expend its funds for charitable purposes outside the state;³³ and when organized to establish and maintain a school in a town for the education of children residing therein, it may receive pupils who are not domiciled inhabitants of the town.³⁴ In an early case, it was held that in a proper case a charitable corporation may apply for an amendment to its charter authorizing the corporation to hold and appropriate its surplus funds to a purpose, other than that for which the charity was originally established.³⁵

Unincorporated associations. An unincorporated charitable association may, in the absence of any statute forbidding, acquire and hold real and personal property by purchase, gift, bequest, or otherwise;³⁶ and where the trustees of a charitable trust, or the charitable society of which they are trustees, incorporate, the title to the property held by them in trust passes to, and vests in, the corporation.³⁷ Incorporation of a charitable association does not preclude acceptance by the corporation of a gift to such association, provided the incorporation has not wrought a change contrary to provisions of such gift.³⁸

Exercise of power. Under an applicable statute of incorporation expressly providing that a majority of the whole number of trustees shall be necessary to constitute a quorum, action by the majority of the trustees of a charitable corporation is necessary to the valid exercise of corporate powers.³⁹ Where, in order to provide means which will permit the trustees of a charity to execute their trust with less difficulty, they are by special act incorporated, in exercising fundamental, as distinguished from administrative, powers of such corporation, action by a majority of the members constituting such corporation is required to constitute a valid corporate act.⁴⁰

Representation by officers and agents. The authority of the officers of a charitable corporation to bind it is never presumed and must be specifically proved.⁴¹ Like other corporations, see the C.J.S. title Corporations § 1014, also 14 a C.J. p 373 note 88, a charitable corporation may ratify and become Powers of treasurer of a charitable corporation to bind it may be more strictly construed than those of treasurers of manufacturing and trading corporations. M. C. A. v. Royal Indemnity Co., 194 N.E. 125, 289 Mass. 391.

bound by unauthorized acts of its officers and agents which are within the scope of its corporate powers and which might have been previously authorized by it.⁴²

The officers of a charitable corporation may have power to convey its property particularly where such conveyance is necessary to perpetuate the charitable purposes of the corporation.⁴³ The officers of a charitable association may likewise, bind it by a lease of its real property in order to obtain income to be used in carrying out the charitable objects of the association.⁴⁴ On the other hand, a treasurer of a charitable corporation not engaged in commercial business has no implied authority to bind it by the transfer or sale of securities standing in its name.⁴⁵

Express authority is necessary to enable individual officers or agents of a charitable corporation to bind the corporation by borrowing money⁴⁶ or executing notes;⁴⁷ and the retention by the corporation of property acquired in a transaction of which the note in question was not a part does not constitute a ratification or estoppel on the part of the corporation.⁴⁸ However, where the trustees have power to borrow money for proper corporate purposes, and to execute notes therefor, they may appoint one of their number as agent of the corporation for that purpose, and may expressly or impliedly clothe him with authority to borrow money and to give notes.⁴⁹

The trustees, elected to manage the affairs of a corporation organized for charitable purposes, cannot render its property subject to a mechanic's lien without first having obtained an order of the proper court.⁵⁰

§ 73. Duties and Liabilities

The duties and liabilities of charities are discussed hereafter in detail, as regards contracts, in § 74, and as regards torts, in § 75.

§ 74. — Liability on Contract

Charities may be liable for breach of contract.

If a charitable institution is guilty of a breach of contract, recovery may be had against it.⁵¹ No recovery, based on a debt incurred by one having no interest in the trust, may, however, be had against a charitable trust fund.⁵²

Notwithstanding the general rule exempting charitable hospitals from liability for injury to patients resulting from the tortious acts of physicians, nurses, or other persons in the employment of such hospitals, see infra § 75, it has been held that a charitable hospital may be liable for the breach of an express contract to furnish a patient, skilled and careful treatment.⁵³ On the other hand, it has been held that where there is no liability for tort, no liability is assumed by a contract purporting to bind the hospital to render careful treatment.⁵⁴

Criticism of rule answered

"This rule does not put such charities above the law, for their conduct is subject to the supervision of the court of equity; nor does it deny an injured person a remedy for his wrong. It is merely an exception to the rule of respondeat superior, which is itself based on reasons of whether a charitable institution may be held liable for its torts, and in those jurisdictions in which such a liability is recognized its imposition in a particular case may depend on the relation to the charity of the person injured and on the nature of the act out of which the injury arises.

The authorities on the subject of liability of charities for the negligence of agents or employees are extremely divergent.⁵⁷

Some of the cases absolutely deny the liability of a charitable institution, in any event, to pay damages for injuries arising from the negligence or other tort of its servants or agents,⁵⁸ and while there exists authority to the effect that the trust fund theory of exemption, which is stated and considered in the course of this section, does not require that charitable organizations shall be absolutely immune,⁵⁹ public policy. The injured person has his remedy against the actual wrongdoer. It is said, however, that he may be and often is financially irresponsible. But the answer is that the law does not undertake to provide a solvent defendant for every wrong done. There are many cases of wrongful injury not compensated, because the wrongdoer is insolvent. The head of a family is liable for the torts of his servants; but you cannot take his homestead and break up his family to satisfy a judgment against him, either for his own or for his servant's torts. Public policy says it is better for the individual to suffer the injury uncompensated than for the state to suffer the evil consequences of having the homes and families of its citizens destroyed. The state is likewise most deeply interested in the preservation of public charities. Questions of public policy must be determined upon consideration of what on the whole will best promote the general welfare."—Vermillion v. Woman's College of Due West, supra.

Exemption not subject to waiver

A public charitable corporation cannot waive its exemption from liability in tort and hence does not waive such exemption by its failure to plead the exemption prior to the entry of a default judgment against it.—Marabia v. Mary Thompson Hospital of Chicago for Women and Children, 224 Ill.App. 367, reversed on other grounds 140 N.E. 836, 309 Ill. 147.

59. Tenn.—Love v. Nashville Agricultural and Normal Institute, 243 S.W. 304, 309, 146 Tenn. 550, 23 A.L.R. 837.

Analogy to individual liability

"It is fundamental that an individual in doing a charitable act is responsible for his conduct which inflicts injury upon others, notwith-

and there is other authority to the effect that the actual diversion of the institution's trust funds is the essential factor to be considered,⁶⁰ it is usually held that logical consistency requires that charitable institutions be regarded as absolutely exempt where the trust fund theory has been adopted.⁶¹

Another line of cases, in total dissatisfaction with the rules, exempting a charitable institution from tort liability, and their various reasons, have repudiated such rules altogether and hold those bodies as much subject as others to the doctrine of respondeat superior.⁶²

A third line of authority takes the view that there is no general exemption from tort liability in favor of charitable institutions, as such,⁶³ although, notwithstanding this view, it is held that in the absence of negligence on the part of a charitable institution in selecting persons to perform nonadministrative functions, it is not liable for injuries resulting from their negligence in the performance of such functions.⁶⁴

In order that exemption from liability for its torts shall be available to a charitable institution, as such, it is essential that, when sued, it plead and prove facts entitling it to such exemption.⁶⁵

Grounds for exemption. Rules for exempting, either totally or to a limited extent, charitable institutions from liability for torts are based generally, either expressly or inferentially, on public policy.⁶⁶ Another ground of exemption known as the "trust standing the benevolent purpose of his act . . . there would seem to be no reason at all for exempting him from liability where he sets apart a fund and places it in the hands of trustees to administer."—Love v. Nashville Agricultural and Normal Institute, supra.

Judgment and execution

(1) It has been held that the trust fund rule does not preclude the recovery of a judgment against a charitable institution based on the tort of its agents or employees but prohibits the execution of such judgment from the trust funds of the institution.—St. Mary's Academy of Sisters of Loretto of City of Denver v. Solomon, supra.

(2) But where it appears that the satisfaction of a judgment against a charitable institution would deplete its trust funds, it has been held that an action to recover such judgment cannot be maintained.—Brown v. St. Luke's Hospital Ass'n, 274 P. 740, 85 Colo. 167.

Reasons for rule

"It is a trite saying that charity begins at home. . . . Men and corporations alike are required to be just before being charitable. We do not think it would be good public policy to relieve them from liability for torts or negligence. Where innocent persons suffer through their fault, they should not be exempted. That rule, in the long run, will tend to increased efficiency and benefit them and the public, as well as persons so injured. It is almost contradictory to hold that an institution organized to dispense charity shall be charitable and extend aid to others, but shall not compensate or aid those injured by it in carrying on its activities."—*Geiger v. Another statement of rule

"Principle is that, in organized so-fund theory,"⁶⁷ is that trust funds created for charitable purposes should not be diverted therefrom to pay damages arising from torts of servants.⁶⁸ A third ground of exemption, known as that of "implied waiver,"⁶⁹ proceeds on the theory that, where one accepts the benefit of a public charity, he exempts by implied contract the benefactor from liability for the negligence of the servants in administering the charity, at least where the benefactor has used due care in the selection of those servants.⁷⁰ All three of these grounds have been held to be based on sound logic by cases not expressly adopting any one, nor all of them.⁷¹ Where the exemption of a charitable institution as regards injuries sustained by a recipient of the charity could have been based on more than one of the foregoing grounds, a judicial declaration of the precise ground on which nonliability was based has been denied.⁷² There are cases wherein the trust fund doctrine has been criticized,⁷³ and in that line of decisions which exempts charitable institutions from liability for negligence of persons engaged to perform nonadministrative functions, both the waiver doctrine⁷⁴ and the trust fund doctrine⁷⁵ have apparently been discarded, the courts in such cases taking the view that in analogy to the general rule which exempts a contractee from liability for injuries to third persons resulting from the negligence of independent contractors, see the C.J.S. title Master and Servant § 584, also 39 C.J. p 1324 note 11, and the C.J.S. title Negligence § 92, also 45 C.J. p 880 note 60, a charitable institution ought not to be liable for the torts of persons while performing the duties of a nonadministrative agent of such institution.⁷⁶ ciet, the rights of the individual must, in some instances, be subordinated to the public good. It is better for the individual to suffer injury without compensation than for the public to be deprived of the benefit of the charity."—*Vermillion v. More specifically

(1) In opposition to this doctrine

it has been pointed out that the same principle, logically extended, would exempt such bodies from liability for any tort of a servant, whereas, at least in some jurisdictions, there are various torts for which all employers are held responsible, even though they are engaged in public charity.—Tucker v. Mobile Infirmary Assoc., 68 So. 4, 191 Ala. 572, L.R.A.1915D 1167—11 C.J. p 376 note 7.

(2) In a case, declaring charitable institutions to be liable for torts in the same manner as other corporations and individuals, it was said that the trust fund theory "has been so weakened and limited by the decisions that it is not likely to hereafter have practical application or importance." — *Geiger v. In some instances charitable institutions have been exonerated from liability for the negligence of their officers, trustees, and servants because they were agencies of the government;⁷⁷ but in a particular case a charitable institution's claim of exemption for injury to a recipient of its charity, on the ground that the institution was acting as an agency of the state was denied.⁷⁸

Nondelegable duties. There are tort cases against charities which do not come within the foregoing classifications and discussion at all, cases where the duty owed is one specifically cast on defendant by law, and therefore incapable of being evaded or escaped by being delegated to any servant.⁷⁹ Liability in such cases does not rest on the rule of respondeat superior, but on the narrower one that the duty is one for defendant to perform itself, and into which the question of the negligence of servants does not enter.⁸⁰ In jurisdictions, however, where the charitable corporation is wholly exempt from liability for torts, as on the trust fund theory, considered hereafter in this section, it has been deemed immaterial whether the tort is that of the corporation itself in selecting its servants or that of superior officers and agents, or that of its servants,⁸¹ and this notwithstanding the person injured is a beneficiary of the institution's charitable service.⁸² On the other hand, in many decisions the courts have limited the exemption of a charitable institution for the negligence of its servants and agents to cases where there has been no negligence in the selection or retention of such persons,⁸³ particularly as regards injuries to recipients of the institution's charity.⁸⁴ Under this view a charitable in-

(1) The attempt to distinguish between the liability of a charitable institution for negligence in selecting its servants and exemption for the negligence of servants has been described as, an "illogical compromise between two irreconcilable principles"—i. e. between liability and exemption.—St. Mary's Academy of Sisters of Loretto of City of Denver v. Solomon, 238 P. 22, 77 Colo. 463, 42 A.L.R. 964, followed in 238 P. 25, 77 Colo. 474.

(2) "What difference can it make whether the tort is that of the corporation itself or its superior officers and agents, or that of its servants? Liability for the one would as effectually embarrass or sweep away the charity as the other. It would therefore be illogical to admit liability for the one and deny it for the other."—Vermillion v. Child falling from fire escape

stitution may be regarded as under a nondelegable duty of care and diligence to select competent employees,⁸⁵ and may be liable to a recipient of the institution's services for injuries resulting from the negligence of the institution in selecting the servants whose negligence caused the injury in question.⁸⁶

Relation to charity of person injured. In jurisdictions where the exemption of charitable institutions for the negligence of their agents or servants is held to be complete, the relation of the injured person to the particular institution is immaterial.⁸⁷ Also, under that line of authority which grants exemption to charitable institutions only from the negligence of persons properly selected to perform non-administrative functions, that an injured person happens to be a beneficiary of an institution's charitable service has been held to have no application to a case wherein the negligence complained of is that of a mere servant or employee.⁸⁸ On the other hand, in jurisdictions where charitable institutions are not entirely immune from liability for the negligence or torts of their agents and servants, it is usually held that, in the absence of negligence on the part of a charitable institution in their selection, it is not liable for their negligence or torts when the injured person is a recipient of the institution's charitable service.⁸⁹ Since the acceptance club for needy children and selected its employees with due care was not liable for death of six year old boy who fell off fire escape on outside of club building.—Bardinelli v. Church of All Nations, Methodist Episcopal, Cal.App., 73 P.2d 1264.

Agreement on rule but not on reasons

While the courts are in practical agreement in stating and applying the text rule, there is a diversity of opinion as to the reasons therefor. U.S.—Ettlinger v. Trustees of Randolph-Macon College, C.C.A.Va., 31 F.2d 869, 872.

"False and fraudulent representations"

The making of "false and fraudulent representations" whereby a beneficiary of a charitable institution was induced to remain therein was held to fall within the meaning of the words "negligence or torts" in the text statement of the rule.—Boardman v. Burlingame, 197 A. 761, 123 Conn. 646.

Safety of instrumentalities and place

(1) The rule requiring a master to furnish his servant with reasonably safe instrumentalities wherewith, and places wherein, to do his work, see the C.J.S. title Master and Servant § 201, also 39 C.J. page 308 note 13, does not apply to a charity so as to impose any such duty toward a recipient of its charity.—Higsons v. Pratt Institute, C.C.A.N.Y., 45 F.2d 698.

(2) A so-called "Safe place statute" requiring public buildings to be kept safe has been held to be applicable to a charitable corporation, as respects one attending church luncheon, injured on unlighted stair-of payment from some of its beneficiaries does not alter the status of a corporation or association otherwise classed as charitable, see infra § 2, the rule that a charity is not liable for the negligence of its agents or employees is applicable in cases where the person injured is one who has paid for the services rendered by the charity.⁹⁰

ity for their torts, it is held that such institutions are not liable for injuries sustained by their employees⁹¹ or third persons.⁹² On the other hand, where the view prevails that a charity may, under some circumstances, be liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of its agents or employees, a charity may be liable for injury to an employee⁹³ or a third person,⁹⁴ particularly when he is a complete stranger.⁹⁵ way.—Wilson v. Evangelical Lutheran Church of Reformation of Milwaukee, 230 N.W. 708, 202 Wis. 111.

(3) However, in action against a boys' charitable organization for injuries sustained by boy beneficiary when an improvised diving board in organization's swimming pool struck boy as another swimmer jumped off board, it was held that the premises involved did not constitute a "place of employment," within safe place statute, so as to place statutory liability on the organization.—Waldman v. Young Men's Christian Ass'n of Janesville, Wis., 277 N.W. 632.

Violation of ordinance

A municipal ordinance, regulating operation of elevators, imposes no liability against charitable institutions, otherwise exempt, under the text rule, for injury resulting from violation of such ordinance, in the absence of such express or implied intent in such ordinance.—Susman v. Young Men's Christian Ass'n of Seattle, 172 P. 554, 101 Wash. 487.

Invitee attending religious service

Nature of acts to which exemption extends.

While, under the view that a charity is exempt from liability for negligence, it is not liable for such negligence while engaged in functions within its corporate powers and calculated to accomplish its purposes,⁹⁶ the exemption of a charitable institution from liability for torts is not ordinarily regarded as extending to torts arising in the course of work not in connection with the charity,⁹⁷ and, more particularly, to activities beyond its corporate powers.⁹⁸ The exemption of a charitable institution from liability cannot properly be claimed by an association or corporation which is not actually such an institution.⁹⁹

Fact of insurance. The fact that a charitable organization has procured indemnity or liability insurance will not impose liability on it for the torts of its agents where it would not otherwise be liable.¹

Maintenance of nuisance. A charitable institution, even when not suable at law, is subject to an injunction against the continuance of a nuisance,² and is liable for damages which may be allowed as additional relief.³

b. Hospitals

A charitable hospital is, according to some authorities, completely exempt from liability for tort, according to other authorities it is liable to the same extent as other persons, while the third rule is that, while not completely exempt from liability, it is exempt from liability for the acts of its agents or employees performing non-administrative functions. These views are varied to some extent by the status of the person injured as a patient, employee, or stranger and by the delegable character of the duty on the negligence of which liability is predicated.

As in the case of charities generally, which have been considered in the preceding subdivision of this section, there is a divergence of opinion as to the liability of a charitable hospital for the torts or negligence of its agents or employees. According to one view a total exemption exists;⁴ according to a contrary view the hospital is liable for the torts of its agents and employees to the same extent as would be any person under similar circumstances;⁵ the third view is that, while a charitable hospital is not completely exempt from tort liability,⁶ it is not liable for the torts or negligence of persons who have been procured by it to perform nonadministrative functions where the injury in question occurs during the performance of such functions.⁷

A hospital claiming to be exempt from liability for tort as a charitable institution has the burden of establishing the elements of that defense.⁸

Nondelegable duties. A charitable hospital may be liable for its own neglect of duty, as distinguished from the negligence of its servants.⁹ For example, it may be liable for its failure to exercise due care in the selection of physicians, nurses, attendants, or other agents or employees whose acts result in the injuries complained of.¹⁰ On the other hand, under the doctrine of complete exemption, it has been held that the hospital is not liable merely because of such negligence,¹¹ nor is it rendered liable by a death statute imposing liability for death occasioned by negligence while engaged in business.¹² In order that liability may be predicated on negligence in the selection of agents or em-

Wilson, Ariz., 77 P.2d 458.

Evidence sufficient to sustain finding that charitable hospital was negligent in selection and retention of nurse.—Norfolk Protestant Hospital v. Plunkett, 173 S.E. 363, 162 Va. 151.

Evidence insufficient

(1) Student nurse's negligence, causing injury to charitable hospital's patient, in leaving hot water bottle in bed prepared for patient after operation.—Bise v. St. Luke's Hospital, 43 P.2d 4, 181 Wash. 269.

(2) That three weeks prior to time infant was burned by negligent exposure to hot-water bottle in hospital another baby was burned in a somewhat similar manner, and that a certain nurse named in the evidence assisted in the case of the other infant, was held not to establish that the hospital did not use care in her selection and retention.—Southern Methodist Hospital and Sanatorium of Tucson v. Wilson, Ariz., 77 P.2d 458.

(3) Mere proof that operating room nurses were negligent, which resulted in burning of patient's leg, was insufficient to prove negligence on part of charitable hospital in failure to prescribe proper rules of government or in selection or retention of offending nurses.—Steele v. St. Joseph's Hospital, Tex.Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 1083, error refused.

of complete exemption of charitable institutions for their torts, it is not material that the injured person happens to be a patient.¹⁷ Under the narrower rule of exemption from liability which limits that exemption to torts committed by persons engaged to perform nonadministrative functions, in the absence of negligence in the selection of third persons which a charitable hospital has undertaken merely to supply for the purpose of healing, it is not liable for their torts resulting in injury to patients of the hospital,¹⁸ and under this rule it has been held exempt from liability for the torts of physicians and surgeons,¹⁹ and of nurses and others properly engaged in the function of nursing,²⁰ but it is not exempt from liability for personal injuries caused by the negligence of one acting as a mere servant or employee.²¹ Exemption from liability cannot, according to cases adhering to these rules, be based on the ground that in serving the community the hospital is performing a governmental function.²²

The mere fact that a person who is injured by the tort or negligence of the hospital or its agents or employees is a pay patient is not regarded as affecting the right of the hospital to exemption,²³

Reasons irreconcilable

"While the conclusions are in accord, the reasons advanced for the conclusions are irreconcilable."—Shane v. Hospital of the Good Samaritan, Cal.App., 37 P.2d 1066, 1067.

Contractual incapacity of patient

A charitable hospital's exemption from liability for injuries to patient was not affected by the fact that the patient was a new-born baby, who could not enter into a contract, since the father, in the selection of the hospital for birth of the baby, assumed the risk in the baby's behalf.—Weston's Adm'x v. Hospital of St. Vincent of Paul, 107 S.E. 785, 131 Va. 587, 23 A.L.R. 907.

Another statement of rule

"It is said that this relation is not one of master and servant, but that the physician occupies the position, so to speak, of an independent contractor, following a separate calling liable, of course, for his own wrongs to the patient whom he undertakes to serve, but involving the hospital in no liability, if due care has been taken in his selection."—*Schloendorff v. Petition

(1) Where pay patient in charity hospital is injured by the negligence of an employee, petition need not allege that the corporation failed to exercise ordinary care in the selection of its officers and employees or in retaining them to recover funds derived from pay patients. However, in so far as the petition seeks to recover or subject to judgment funds held by a charitable hospital in trust for charitable objects, it is essential that it be alleged that the hospital failed to exercise ordinary care in the selection of servants whose conduct caused the injury in question.—Morton v. liability, the hospital has been held not liable for its negligence as to employees³¹ or third persons.³² The rule that the hospital is exempt from liability for the torts of persons provided for the performance of nonadministrative functions has been held not to affect its liability to strangers or persons other than patients for the torts of its employees committed within the scope of their employment.³³ The question of whether the person injured was or was not a pay patient does not enter into the question of the liability of the hospital to a third person.³⁴

Railroad and like hospitals. Railroad and other corporations or associations formed and maintained by them, having in their regular employ physicians and surgeons whose duty to those corporations requires them to care for the sick and injured among the corporations' employees, are not liable to those employees for the malpractice or negligence of such physicians and surgeons, when there has been no negligence in selecting them.³⁵ This view is based on the assumption that the railroad company or the association maintained under its direction does not derive any pecuniary profit or gain from the conduct of the institution. If such is the case, a different standard of responsibility is established.³⁶ Where a railroad required its employees to pay a fixed sum at regular specified intervals toward a hospital controlled by the railroad, it was held not to be exempt, as a charitable institution, for injuries to such employees resulting from the negligence of the hospital attendants, agents, or employees, and this notwithstanding the absence of any showing whether or not the railroad company derives a profit from the arrangement.³⁷ A railroad may, of course, be liable for injuries resulting to an injured workman resulting from the negligence of the railroad's own employee, in the selection of whom the railroad has been negligent.³⁸

Noncharitable institution. A hospital which is not in fact a charitable institution is not exempt from liability under rules applicable to charitable hospitals alone.³⁹

Fact of insurance. Where a charitable hospital is not otherwise liable for the torts of its agents or employees, it is not rendered liable by the fact that it has procured insurance against such liability.⁴⁰

Unlawful possession of body. Under a statute imposing liability on any person, association, or company having possession of a dead body, a charitable hospital may be liable for the acts of its agents or employees in retaining possession of a dead body.⁴¹

§ 76. Dissolution

Charitable corporations and associations are subject to dissolution under particular circumstances.

As in the case of other corporations see the C. J.S. title Corporations §§ 1656, 1663, also 14 A C.J. p 1104 note 60, p 1107 note 98, a charitable corporation may be dissolved by forfeiture of its franchise for nonuser or misuser.⁴² For example, where there has been a misuser, or a nonuser, in regard to matters which are of the essence of the contract between the corporation and the state, and the acts or omissions complained of have been repeated and willful, they may constitute a just ground of forfeiture.⁴³ However, a franchise granted by the state to a charitable corporation cannot be taken away by the state except for just cause.⁴⁴ A fortiori, a trustee charged with the conduct of such corporation will not be permitted to take away its charter without just cause.⁴⁵ In the absence of statutory authority, a charitable corporation has no power, by the action of its stockholders and directors, or of either, voluntarily to dissolve itself;⁴⁶ but a court of equity has power, on a breach of trust, to dissolve such a corporation.⁴⁷ It will not ordinarily exercise such power, however, while those remain who will execute the public trust, especially where only a minority desires dissolution.⁴⁸ A vote of the membership of a charitable association to transfer its funds to another charitable organization, coupled with a failure to hold subsequent meetings or elect officers, has been held to work a dissolution of such association.⁴⁹ A statutory mode of dissolution must be followed strictly, if the charitable organization would avail

Ownership by charitable corporation

That corporation owning a hospital is a charitable organization does not preclude a patient from recovering for negligence of nurse employed by such hospital, where patient paid for accommodations at rate ordinarily charged by hospitals conducted for profit, and had no knowledge of charitable character of such corporation.—Stewart v. Question for jury; direction of verdict

(2) In a particular case, however, uncontradicted testimony of member of hospital board that hospital was not operated for profit and was maintained by gifts, bequests, and fees from patients able to pay, was held to require directed verdict for defendant on ground that hospital was charitable institution.—Walsh v. Waste of corporate property

(1) Continual waste of property of corporation organized for charitable purposes is ground for forfeiture of corporation's charter, particularly where property has become of historic value.—Commonwealth ex rel. Schnader v. Seventh Day Baptists of Ephrata, 176 A. 17, 317 Pa. 358.

(2) This waste need not continue to such extent that purposes of the corporation are impossible of fulfillment before its charter may be forfeited, continuous, deliberate waste, and such disregard of corporate purposes as completely deprived public of charitable benefits, for which corporation was created, being sufficient.—Commonwealth ex rel. Schnader v. Seventh Day Baptists of Ephrata, supra.

(3) In a particular case unauthorized sales of land belonging to religious corporation, charter of which provided for application of proceeds of its property to support of members and poor thereof, coupled with corporate waste and mismanagement, as in permitting sale of valuable antiques, tearing down building of historic value, and failing to account for moneys collected, pay taxes, dispense charity, and hold religious services regularly, were held to justify judgment forfeiting the corporation's charter and ousting its trustees.—Commonwealth ex rel. itself of the statutory provisions,⁵⁰ and it must further appear that the statute in question is applicable, it being held in some states that a statute relating to the winding up of insolvent corporations generally is not applicable to the case of an insolvent corporation administering a charitable use.⁵¹

§ 77. — Disposal of Property on Dissolution

On dissolution of charitable corporations their property, according to some authority, reverts to the original donor or his heirs; according to other authority, such property should be devoted to purposes similar to those of the dissolved corporation.

Under rules of reverter heretofore considered, see supra § 67, it has been held in some jurisdictions, on the dissolution of a charitable corporation, the title to its property reverts to the original donor or his heirs,⁵² subject to debts incurred by the corporation,⁵³ although a statute authorizing donors of property for the purpose of establishing and maintaining specified types of charitable institutions to sue for the dissolution of such institutions and regain title to such property has been held to be unconstitutional as discriminating against other classes of donors.⁵⁴ In other jurisdictions, on dissolution the property of a charitable organization does not revert to the donors, nor may it be divided among the members of the association, but in pursuance of the doctrine of cy pres, see supra § 52, should be devoted to the purpose most nearly akin to the intent of the donors, under the direction of the court.⁵⁵ In the latter class of jurisdictions, when an incorporated charitable institution has ceased its operations, and, having sold its property, holds the proceeds subject to the order of the court, the wishes and recommendations of the contributors are not absolutely controlling as to its decree;⁵⁶ and, if such institution is a temporary home for poor children, it is within the court's discretion to award the fund to a children's aid society rather than to a hospital and dispensary.⁵⁷ Where the property of a charitable corporation has been acquired with funds appropriated to its use by the state, it is competent for the legislature, in dissolving the corporation, to direct that the proceeds of the property be returned to the county treasury of the county in which the institution is located;⁵⁸ and, even where such a statute is alleged to be unconstitutional, the trustees of the corporation cannot recover back the proceeds of the property which they have voluntarily paid to the county treasurer in pursuance of the mandate of the statute, where the corporation has no creditors, and no person claims title by reversion.⁵⁹ Under a federal statute of escheats, it was held that land granted by the federal government to a charitable corporation should on its dissolution escheat to the federal government,⁶⁰ and under a state statute of escheats, it was held that, on the dissolution of a charitable organization, land which it had bought and paid for escheated to the county wherein such land was situated, rather than reverted to the heirs of the organization's grantor.⁶¹

X. FOREIGN CHARITIES

§ 78. In General

Generally courts administer charities only within the state and conforming to its public policy, and by comity foreign charities are not given greater rights than domestic.

The courts will not administer a foreign charity,⁶² but will direct the money devoted to it to be paid over to the proper persons, leaving its administration to the courts of the state where the charity is to be established.⁶³ If a charitable gift is clearly against the public policy of the state which is called on to administer it, its courts may decline to administer it and remit the fund to the testator's domicile, but they cannot properly divest the title and transfer it to others.⁶⁴ A foreign religious society cannot by comity have a better right than domestic corporations to take property by devise.⁶⁵

It has been held that neither the fact that the trustees receiving the gift were conducting a charity in a sister state under a nonintervention will, invalid in the state of the testator's domicile,⁶⁶ nor the fact that the funds of a valid charitable gift in trust were to be expended in a foreign country,⁶⁷ nor that the bequest indicated an intention to grant immediate relief and payment was delayed,⁶⁸ will invalidate a charitable trust for the benefit of foreign or nonresident beneficiaries.

Capacity of foreign corporation to take as trustee of charitable trust see supra § 31.

§ 79. What Law Governs

Generally a charitable devise of land is governed by the law of the place where the land lies, while a charitable bequest of personal property is governed by the law of the testator's domicile.

The general rule to be deduced from the facts and the language of the cases is that the validity of a charitable devise of lands depends on the law of the state where the land lies, and that the validity of a charitable bequest of personal property depends on the laws of the state where the testator had his domicile.⁶⁹ If the will contains a particular bequest of funds to be transmitted to and administered for particular purposes in another state or country, the validity of such bequest must be tested by the law of the latter state or country;⁷⁰ and a bequest to a charity, or on a trust to be administered in another state or country, where lawful in the place of the testator's domicile, may be sustained in the state in which the fund is to be administered, although it contravenes the statute of the latter state against perpetuities, since it is not the policy of one state to interdict perpetuities in other states.⁷¹ A statute providing that a charitable trust shall not fail by reason of indefiniteness of the beneficiaries applies only to trusts to be executed within the state,⁷² but a trust otherwise valid, under such a statute, will be sustained although the beneficiaries are not necessarily or in terms confined to residents of the state.⁷³ The legality of a charitable gift to a foreign corporation or association usually depends on the ability to take under the laws of the place where it exists or is domiciled.⁷⁴

A will making a bequest to charity is construed according to the law of the testator's domicile if the bequest is of personal property,⁷⁵ while if realty is devised the will is construed according to the law of the place where the property lies.⁷⁶ Whether a donation in a particular case is a public charity depends upon the law of the state where it is created and administered.⁷⁷

Generally a charity is administered according to the law of the donor's domicile,⁷⁸ and the fact that it is to be administered abroad does not make the gift void, especially where it does not appear that it is not a valid charity in the foreign state or country.⁷⁹ However, where the object of the trust is the acquisition of lands in another state, the execution thereof must depend entirely on the validity, under the laws of that state, of the trust under which the land is there to be held or on the competency to take of the donee on whom the title is to be conferred.⁸⁰

CHARIVARI. A mock serenade of discordant music, or noises, made with kettles, tin horns, etc., designed to annoy and insult; a vile or noisy music made with tin horns, bells, kettles, pans, etc., in derision of some person or event.¹ It was at first directed against widows who married a second time, at an advanced age, but is now extended to other occasions of nocturnal annoyance and insult.²

CHARTE-PARTIE. In French marine law, a charter-party.²⁰

CHARTER.

As a Noun

A grant made by the sovereign, either to the whole people or to a portion of them, securing to them the enjoyment of certain rights;²¹ the authority by virtue of which an organized body acts²² and, more specifically, an act of a legislative body creating a municipal or other corporation, and defining its powers and privileges;²³ the common name for a certificate of incorporation;²⁴ the constitution, or the organic law of a city.²⁵

The applications of, and the legal principles governing, the last two specific definitions are more fully discussed in the C.J.S. titles Corporations and Municipal Corporations. As a contract for the hiring of all or part of a vessel see the C.J.S. title Shipping §§ 26-56, also 58 C.J. p 106 note 74-p 263 note 34.

Phrases: "Catch time charter," see the C.J.S. title Shipping § 43, also 58 C.J. p 204 note 9 [b], "charter of a city," see the C.J.S. title Municipal Corporations § 10, also 43 C.J. p 84 notes 71-86, "charter of a corporation" or "corporate charter," see the C.J.S. title Corporations § 947, also 14A C.J. p 258 note 34-p 259 note 47, "home rule charslaves, loyally granted by Henry III early in his reign (A.D. 1217).—Black L.D.

Charta de quiete clamantia—a charter or deed of quitclaim.—Adams Gloss.

Charta de una parte—a deed-poll; a deed of one part; formerly used to distinguish a "deed poll," that is, an agreement made by one party only—from a deed "inter partes."—Black L.D.

Chartæ libertatum—the charters (grants) of liberties; these are Magna Charta and Charta de Foresta.—Black L.D.

Charta indentata—a charter or deed indented.—Adams Gloss.

Charta libertatem regni—the charter of the nation's liberty; applied to Magna Charta, as the great charter of liberty.—Adams Gloss.

Charta (or carta) pardonationis—In English criminal law, a charter under the great seal by which a man is forgiven a felony or other offense committed against the king's crown and dignity.—Adams Gloss.

Charta pardonationis se defendendo—In old English law, a form of pardon for killing another man in his own defense.—Adams Gloss., citing Reg. Orig. fol 287.

Charta partita—literally, a deed divided; hence, a charter-party.—Black L.D.

Charta per legem terræ—the charter by the law of the land.—Adams Gloss.

Charta pura—Latin, a blank piece of paper.—Adams Gloss.

Charta regia—In English law, an instrument in writing conferring a grant from the crown to any person or persons, or to any body politic, of any rights, liberties, franchises, or privileges; it is commonly known as a "royal charter."—Adams Gloss., citing Bracton fol 33 b.

Charta seu libellus prædialis—a charter or deed of land.—Adams Gloss.

Charta sua manifeste expressa—clearly expressed by his or her deed (or writing).—Adams Gloss.

Magna Charta—the great charter. The name of a charter (or constitutional enactment) granted by King John of England to the barons, at Runnymede, on June 15, 1215, and afterward, with some alterations, confirmed in parliament by Henry III and Edward I. This charter is justly regarded as the foundation of English constitutional liberty. Among its thirty-eight chapters are found provisions for regulating the administration of justice, defining the temporal and ecclesiastical jurisdictions, securing the personal liberty of the subject and his rights of property, and the limits of taxation, and for preserving the liberties and privileges of the church. Magna Charta is so called, partly to distinguish it from the Charta de Foresta, which was granted about the same time, and partly by reason of its own transcendent importance.—Black L. D.

Bestes des charues—beasts of the plow.—Black L.D.

CHASE.English

A large extent of woody ground lying open and privileged for wild beasts and wild fowl; also a franchise granted by the crown to a subject, empowering the latter to keep for his diversion, within a certain precinct so-called, the wild animals of chase.⁵¹ "Chase" has been distinguished from "park."⁵²

Common chase. A place where all alike were entitled to hunt wild animals.⁵³

Other phrases: "Beasts of the chase," see Beast 10 C.J.S. p 220 note 78, and "law of the chase" (as means of acquiring property in game), see the C.J.S. title Game § 2, also 27 C.J. p 942 notes 11–16.

French

In law French, compelled, driven.⁵⁴

CHASING. The art of engraving designs on metallic surfaces with a chisel or a burin;⁵⁵ also a technical term relating to the cutting of bricks for wiring.⁵⁶

CHASSIS. As applied to a motor car, the word means the rectangular metal framework thereof, as distinguished from its body and seats, but including its accessories for propulsion, as the tanks, motor, generator, gears, springs, axles, wheels, tires, fan, and general running gear.⁵⁷

As applied to a radio receiving set, a "chassis" is a metal structure on which the tuned radio frequency receiver complete in all its elements, except its tubes, is mounted.⁵⁸

CHASTE. The word is used as descriptive of persons or of their lives or conduct;⁵⁹ and has been defined as meaning, in popular language, pure, genuine, uncorrupt, undefiled, or virtuous;⁶⁰ and, more specifically, free from all unlawful commerce of the sexes, from obscenity, or from unlawful sexual intercourse;⁶¹ never having had unlawful sexual intercourse.⁶² Applied to persons before marriage, it signifies pure from all sexual commerce, undefiled; and as applied to married persons, it means true to the marriage bed.⁶³ In Spanish, the term is signified by "pura."⁶⁴

Phrases: "Chaste and virtuous,"⁶⁵ "chaste character," see Character ante p 400 notes 53, 54, and "chaste female."⁶⁶

CHASTISEMENT. The act of chastising; also, that which is suffered or experienced in being chastised; especially, pain inflicted for punishment and correction; discipline; punishment.⁶⁷

CHASTITY. Continence, purity; or virtue;⁶⁸ that virtue which prevents the unlawful commerce of the sexes;⁶⁹ also the state of purity or abstinence from unlawful sexual connection.⁷⁰ The term means physical purity as a fact and as an actual condition; actual personal virtue and character, not mere external reputation for chastity;⁷¹ and in the case of an unmarried woman means that she is "virgo intacta."⁷² Unchastity is the opposite of what is defined as chastity.⁷³

CHATEAUX or CHATEUX. Law French, chatels.⁷⁴

I. DEFINITION, NATURE, AND DISTINCTIONS

§ 1. Definition and Nature in General

A chattel mortgage is a conveyance of some present legal or equitable right in personal property, as security for the payment of money, or for the performance of some other act. It operates in some states to pass the legal title to the mortgagee, but in other states merely to create a lien.

A chattel mortgage is a conveyance of some present legal or equitable right in personal property, as security for the payment of money, or for the performance of some other act.¹ The essence of the mortgage is the intention to transfer title to secure the payment of a debt or the performance of an obligation;² and the holder of the mortgage takes it subject to the qualifications attached to the contract by law the moment the contract is formed.³

As passing title. A variance of opinion, similar to that which prevails with reference to mortgages of real property, as explained in the C.J.S. title Mortgages § 1, also 41 C.J. p 274 note 5—p 280 note 22, exists with respect to whether a chattel mortgage passes title or merely creates a lien,⁴ although under either theory it is the giving of security, and is not an absolute and unconditional transfer of the property.⁵

In some states, except to the extent that the rule is modified by statute with respect to mortgages of particular property,⁶ the mortgage operates as a sale of the subject matter on condition subsequent, passing a present legal title subject to be defeated by the performance of the condition,⁷ so that on

Absolute sale

The mortgage operates as absolute sale, passing general property to mortgagee, subject to right to redeem.—Faska v. Saunders, 153 A. 451, 103 Vt. 204—Mason v. Sault, 108 A. 267, 93 Vt. 412.

A purchase-money mortgage conveying legal title retains title in the breach of condition the mortgagee may, so far as legal rights are concerned, treat the property as his own;⁸ and as so defined it has been referred to as a personal mortgage.⁹ In some of these states, however, while the general property is regarded as passing to the mortgagee by the mortgage, there is a statutory right of redemption in the mortgagor existing until there has been a foreclosure in accordance with the statute, which vests a legal right in the mortgagor limiting the right and title of the mortgagee;¹⁰ and accordingly the legal title in the mortgagee is subject to a reversion of title to the mortgagor on payment of the debt or performance of the obligation before foreclosure or sale,¹¹ and this leaves in the mortgagor an interest, as property, which he may sell or transfer, subject to the mortgage, or which may be levied on before default.¹² In equity it has been held that the mortgage is security, and not a conveyance, in the sense that title is divested.¹³

As creating lien. In other states, as a result either of statutory enactment or judicial decision, the mortgage is regarded, not as passing the legal title to the mortgagee, but as constituting a security only, and as merely creating a lien on the subject matter,¹⁴ and under some statutes the creation of seller as security for the debt.—Bradford v. Proctor, 96 So. 203, 209 Ala. 299.

Prima facie title

secondary liens by subsequent mortgages is contemplated.¹⁵ Under this theory the legal title to, or general property in, the chattel mortgaged remains in the mortgagor, until condition broken,¹⁶ notwithstanding an agreement to the contrary,¹⁷ and notwithstanding the mortgage is in form a conveyance.¹⁸ Furthermore, in some states, following the lien theory, no title is regarded as passing to the mortgagee until after foreclosure and sale, or some act tantamount thereto,¹⁹ while in other states the mortgagee, after condition broken, is regarded as having become vested with a special property in the subject matter of the mortgage.²⁰

Status under civil and common law. It seems that a chattel mortgage, as such, is unknown to the civil law,²¹ and according to some authorities, as a lien, was not known at common law,²² and has been said to be in derogation of the common law.²³ On the other hand, it has been said that the power to assign and to transfer property by way of chattel mortgage is not dependent on statute, and was not conferred by the chattel mortgage acts;²⁴ and it has been held that, except so far as modified by controlling statutes, the force and validity of such a mortgage is to be tested by the common law touching sales of personal property.²⁵

§ 2. Statutory Provisions

Chattel mortgages in many states are regulated and controlled by statutes which generally should be strictly construed.

Chattel mortgages in many states are now regulated and controlled by statutes,²⁶ which have been

A purchaser's execution and seller's acceptance of a chattel mortgage, as provided in the contract of sale, passes title to the purchaser and the creation of a lien in favor of the seller as mortgagee.—Theatre Equipment Acceptance Corporation v. Betman, 242 N.W. 953, 259 Mich. 245.

Crop mortgage

Where party secured from bank advances to make crops, giving a mortgage after the crops were planted to secure indebtedness, past, present, and future, the mortgage constituted a lien only on the crops for the current year, and did not constitute title.—Commercial City Bank v. Sullivan, 90 S.E. 173, 18 Ga.App. 608.

Successive assignments of business and assets of a partnership, absolute on their face, do not prevent the operation of the rule that, where the relation is that of debtor and creditor, and the property is regarded as security, there is no transfer of title.—Sternman v. Ziem, 62 P.2d 160, 17 Cal.App.2d 414.

In Illinois

(1) By a decision of the supreme court, "the chattel mortgage act . . . recognizes a lien as existing under the mortgage upon the property mortgaged."—Barchard v. Kohn, 41 N.E. 902, 903, 157 Ill. 579, 29 L.R.A. 803, reversing 54 Ill.App. 629.

(2) By decisions of the court of appeals, however, it has been held that the mortgage passes a qualified title to the mortgagee.—Greenspahn v. Ehrlich, 277 Ill.App. 322—Bross v. Green, 113 Ill.App. 58.

(3) A mortgage in form "granting, selling, conveying, and conforming" the mortgaged property to the mortgagee transfers the legal title at time of delivery of the mortgage.—Van Zele v. Cleaveland, 208 Ill.App. 387, 396.

In New Jersey the rule has been stated that, while at law the mortgage conveys the legal title, in equity it merely creates a lien.—Rosenblatt v. Premier Dyeing Co., 139 A. 389, 101 N.J.Eq. 569.

Repeal of statute

Supplement to act dealing with chattel mortgages, which made cer-

held to be constitutional;²⁷ and where no special types are recognized by, or exempt from, its provisions, such a statute applies to all chattel mortgages.²⁸ Such statutes do not operate retroactively, and the validity and the effect of a mortgage are to be determined by the law in force when it was made.²⁹

The provisions of such a statute, in derogation of the common law, should be strictly construed,³⁰ and will be construed as intending to make such mortgages subject to general laws, except where a contrary intent is expressed.³¹ While the general rule is that the provisions of a statute respecting chattel mortgages are mandatory, the application of the rule concerns only substantial departures from the requirements of the statute.³²

gages are void as to third persons is not void, and, where a mortgage is valid between the parties thereto and there is no provision making it void as to third persons, its terms are binding on those who take with notice.³³

§ 3. Distinctions between Chattel Mortgages and Other Transactions

Whether or not a particular transaction constitutes a chattel mortgage or some other distinguishable transaction depends on the intention of the parties as shown by the instruments executed by them, together with the surrounding facts and circumstances.

Whether or not a particular transaction constitutes a chattel mortgage or some other distinguishable transaction depends on the intention of the parties as ascertained from the character and language of the instruments executed by them, together with the surrounding facts and circumstances;³⁴ and, tain exceptions as to recording where parties execute statement which must be recorded, does not repeal statute relating to mortgages executed by mortgagors engaged in business of selling such goods as those mortgaged.—Smith v. Packard Suburban, 195 A. 618, 122 N.J.Eq. 566.

The constitutionality of a statute regulating trust receipts cannot be challenged on the ground of alleged grave changes introduced into statutory commercial credit methods, since such challenge raises a question of legislative policy and not judicial questions, and the state has undoubted power to modify or enlarge its laws relating to personal property, lien rights thereon, or credit mediums thereof, as well as the filing and recordation requirements therein, provided it does so constitutionally.—In re Boswell, supra.

Better declaration of law

Mortgage covering agricultural implements and farm equipment, granted under statute authorizing granting, recording, and enforcing of chattel mortgages, is not invalid as to subsequent farm mortgage because of subsequently enacted statute providing that chattel mortgage of movables subsequently immobilized should not be affected by sale or mortgage of the immovable, in view of presumption against meaningless legislation applying to prior statute, and the subsequent statute obviously being enacted to better declare the law as it existed under the prior statute.—*Bank of White Castle v. Lien independent of possession

A statute which gives a special right to a lien independent of possession, a situation unknown to the common law with relation to personal property, should be strictly construed.—Kahriman v. Jones, 263 P. 537, 203 Cal. 254.

In Montana, however, under Rev. Codes 1921 § 4, statutes in derogation of common law are no longer to be strictly construed, but all proceedings under code are to be liberally construed, and, no exception having been made as to Chattel Mortgage Statute, Rev. Codes 1921 § 8276, such statute is to be liberally construed.—Swords v. Occident Elevator Co., 232 P. 189, 72 Mont. 189.

Agreement to pay debt

An agreement whereby a debtor executes to his creditor a bill of sale of an automobile, which is placed in the hands of a bailee, the title thereto to become absolute if the debt is not paid, and the car to be returned if the debt is paid, is not a mortgage, but an agreement to pay the debt in money or property at the debtor's election.—*Petridge v. a. In General

A chattel mortgage is to be distinguished from a pledge, although it is sometimes difficult to determine into which class a particular transaction falls.

The securing of the payment of a debt or the performance of other obligations is equally the object of both pledges and chattel mortgages;⁴³ hence, it is sometimes difficult to determine into which class a particular transaction falls,⁴⁴ although there are well recognized distinctions between them.⁴⁵ The law favors a pledge rather than a mortgage in a case where there is any doubt as to whether the transaction is a pledge or a mortgage.⁴⁶

By the statutes in some states the distinction between a mortgage and a pledge is clearly recognized,⁴⁷ while in other jurisdictions the effect of the statutes is to make the rights of a pledgee and of a mortgagee in possession substantially the same.⁴⁸ A contract of pledge being held different from a chattel mortgage, it follows that statutes specifically confined to chattel mortgages are not applicable to pledges,⁴⁹ and vice versa.⁵⁰

b. Effect of Transfer of Title

Under the view that the legal title passes to the mortgagee, a chattel mortgage is distinguished from a pledge in that in case of a mortgage the general property passes to the mortgagee subject to be divested on performance of the condition, whereas under a pledge the pledgee acquires only a special property or lien.

Under the view that the legal title passes to the mortgagee, as announced supra § 1, a chattel mortgage is distinguishable from a pledge in that in the case of a mortgage the general property passes to the mortgagee subject to be divested on performance of the condition, while under a pledge the general property does not pass, the pledgee having only a special property or a lien.⁵¹

Choses in action. In a pledge of choses in action, such as stocks, bonds, and notes, it may be necessary to the value of the security that the legal title pass to the pledgee; but it is held by him for the benefit of the pledgor in whom the general property remains, and the contract is construed in all respects as one of pledge.⁵² Transfer of stock on the books of the corporation from the debtor to the creditor as security is a pledge and not a mortgage.⁵³ Where, however, stocks are deposited with the lender of money as collateral security for the loan with authority to the lender to sell the same on nonpayment of the sum borrowed, the transaction is a mortgage and not a pledge.⁵⁴

Covenant to warrant title. A covenant in the instrument to warrant and defend the title to the thing pledged will not render it a mortgage since such covenant, being in its nature and terms executory, cannot be construed to operate as a conveyance of the title.⁵⁵

c. Effect of Transfer or Retention of Possession

A chattel mortgage is also distinguished from a pledge in that delivery of possession is generally essential to a pledge, but not to a mortgage.

A delivery and retention of the possession of the chattels is generally essential to a pledge, while, as between the parties at least, a delivery is not necessary to the validity of a mortgage.⁶³ If, however, an instrument is in form a mortgage, in that it has a defeasance clause, it will be held to be a mortgage, although possession of the mortgaged chattels is delivered to the mortgagee at the time of its execution.⁶⁴

Where the property attempted to be pledged is in the possession of another party for a specific purpose, as, for instance, collateral security, and delivery of possession is at the time impossible, it is nevertheless a valid pledge and not a mortgage, especially when such was the clear intention of the parties.⁶⁵

d. Effect of Nonperformance

Nonpayment or nonperformance of the condition generally works a forfeiture in case of a chattel mortgage, but not in case of a pledge.

In case of a pledge, nonpayment of the debt even after it is due does not work a forfeiture, but the title remains in the pledgor until it is divested, either by foreclosure in equity or by a sale on due notice. Whereas in the case of a mortgage nonperformance of the condition at the time specified works a forfeiture, and at law no performance or offer to perform thereafter will revest the title in

Delivery of a car under an absolute bill of sale will constitute a pledge and not a chattel mortgage where it appears from a promissory note executed to the transferee contemporaneously therewith that the transfer is made as collateral security for the payment of the note.—*Petition of Chattanooga Savings Bank, C.C.A.Tenn., 261 F. 116—Darragh v. the mortgagor.⁶⁶ In equity, however, contracts of pledge and mortgages are in most respects subject to the same rules, a mortgage being considered in equity but a pledge or security for the payment of the debt or the discharge of the other engagements for which it was originally given.⁶⁷

e. Existence of Independent Debt

A transfer of property as security for an independent debt is a pledge and not a mortgage.

Where a debt exists independent of the transfer of property for the payment of which the transfer is a collateral security, the transaction constitutes a pledge and not a mortgage.⁶⁸

f. Effect of Power of Sale

Power of sale alone does not determine whether the transaction is a pledge or a mortgage.

A power of sale, although a frequent provision in a mortgage, is not determinative of the fact that a particular transaction constitutes a pledge.⁶⁹

g. Necessity of Writing

A distinction has been made that a writing is required for a mortgage but not for a pledge.

A still further distinction observed by some cases is that in case of a pledge no writing is required,⁷⁰ whereas in some jurisdictions a mortgage may be required to be in writing.⁷¹ This distinction, however, is not tenable under the common-law rule that a parol mortgage of personal property is valid as between the parties even without change of possession.⁷²

h. Intention of Parties as Controlling

The intention of the parties may be a controlling factor in determining whether a particular transaction constitutes a mortgage or a pledge.

The intention of the parties will not control the established legal effect of their transaction,⁷³ but, nevertheless, when properly ascertained, it may be a controlling factor in determining whether a doubtful transaction constitutes a mortgage or a pledge,⁷⁴ as where it becomes necessary to determine whether or not they intended the title to pass.⁷⁵ This intention is to be gathered from the language of the entire instrument,⁷⁶ and from the language and conduct of the parties.⁷⁷ In the absence of other means for determining the character of the transaction, its abstract form usually controls the question.⁷⁸

i. Change of Character of Transaction

The character of a transaction, as pledge or mortgage, cannot be altered without a new agreement.

The character of a transaction cannot be altered from a pledge to a chattel mortgage, or, conversely, without a new agreement of the parties.⁷⁹ The fact that a pledge is recorded as a mortgage does not alter its character.⁸⁰

§ 5. — Sale in General

A sale is distinguished from a mortgage, in that a sale is a transfer of absolute property in a chattel for a price, whereas a mortgage is at most a conditional sale or transfer as security, subject to revesting of title in the mortgagor on performance of the condition. In determining whether a transaction is a sale or a mortgage, the intention of the parties as ascertained from the whole transaction is controlling.

the transaction;⁸⁴ and the form which has been given the instrument evidencing the transaction is of but slight importance.⁸⁵

The purpose which the transaction is intended to effectuate is in all cases the final test,⁸⁶ and, if the transaction resolves itself into security for a debt or other obligation, it is generally a mortgage.⁸⁷ Where a bill of sale states on its face that it is intended as security, such fact is ordinarily conclusive that it is intended as a mortgage.⁸⁸

courts will consider such facts as that there has been no transfer of possession,⁸⁹ that the bill of sale contains or is accompanied by a defeasance,⁹⁰ that there is a provision for redemption⁹¹ or an agreement for a reconveyance,⁹² that there is a waiver of homestead,⁹³ that a borrowing on the one hand and a lending on the other is designed at the time of the execution of the instrument,⁹⁴ or that there is a continuation of indebtedness on the part of the seller.⁹⁵

When on the face of the transaction it is doubtful whether the parties intended a mortgage or a sale,⁹⁶ or there is great disparity between the value of the property and the price,⁹⁷ or fraud has intervened to make a transaction intended as a mortgage assume the form of an absolute sale,⁹⁸ equity will treat the transaction as security only. On the other hand, it is equally well settled that, where the transaction clearly shows that the entire interest in property is conveyed without reservation, it will be treated as an absolute sale,⁹⁹ for unless it was intended at the time of the execution of the bill of sale that it should operate as a security, the court will not treat it as a mortgage,¹ particularly where such a construction would destroy the legal effect of the transaction;² and the court cannot change a transaction into a mortgage by a fictitious inference.³ The absence of personal obligation on the part of the vendor shows that the transaction was not a mortgage.⁴

Conveyance not treated as mortgage

Where plaintiff conveyed property to trustee under agreement that corporation should be formed and stock issued to his creditors with the option to him of repurchasing the stock, and a corporate charter was obtained on affidavit, stating that the capital stock had been paid by transfer of the property to the corporation, the bill of sale cannot be construed as a mortgage, as this would show that the charter was obtained by fraud, and the transaction must be given that construction which upholds its legal effect.—Trott v. Flato, supra.

Retaining lien for purchase price. An instrument by which one party agrees to sell, and the other to purchase, certain personal property, and which provides that the vendor shall have a lien on the property until the purchase price is paid, is in the nature of a mortgage,⁵ particularly where it covers other property than that for the purchase price of which the lien is reserved.⁶

Transfer with authority to sell and apply proceeds. Where property is transferred to a creditor with authority in him to sell it and to apply the proceeds to the payment of the transferor's indebtedness and to pay over any surplus to the transferor, the transaction will, ordinarily, be held to be a mortgage;⁷ and the same rule has been applied where the creditor is authorized to satisfy other debts of the transferor as well as that to himself.⁸ A chattel mortgage is not converted into a sale, with a provision that the mortgagor shall act as the agent of the buyer in disposing of the goods, by stipulations concerning agency, which are simply auxiliary to the main purpose of the instrument in securing an indebtedness from the mortgagor to the mortgagee.⁹

Transfer in payment of debt. A transfer of title by a debtor to a creditor, in payment, is in effect a sale and not a mortgage;¹⁰ and it does not affect the application of the rule that the instrument does not, in terms, declare the conveyance to be a satisfaction of the debt,¹¹ or that there is a collateral agreement to resell.¹²

§ 6. — Absolute Bill of Sale as Mortgage

A bill of sale, although absolute on its face, if taken as security for a debt, particularly where it is accompanied by a defeasance, is in effect a mortgage, and will be treated as such as between the parties thereto and as to third persons with notice.

Vendor's lien only on particular article

A vendor's lien can only arise as security for the payment of the purchase price of the particular article on which it is claimed, and an instrument attempting to retain a lien on store fixtures for the purchase price of such fixtures, a stock of merchandise, and other property does not give a vendor's lien, but is a chattel mortgage.—In re Farmers' Co-op. principles,¹⁴ although the instrument contains a stipulation that the title to the property is to become absolute on default of the repayment by the seller of the consideration.¹⁵

This rule is particularly applicable where the bill of sale contains or is accompanied by a defeasance, as explained supra § 5. The fact, however, that an instrument contains no defeasance does not determine its character; if it clearly and expressly appears from the instrument itself that it is given as security for an alleged indebtedness, this fact stamps it as a mortgage,¹⁶ even though the word "security" is not used.¹⁷ The courts, however, will not assume or hold that an absolute transfer of property is security for a debt, where the purpose of the transfer is made clear by the transaction between the parties, and this purpose is contrary to the idea of security,¹⁸ as where no debt or obligation remains in existence.¹⁹

Separate written defeasance. The execution of a defeasance simultaneously with a bill of sale absolute on its face constitutes them, in contemplation of law, one entire instrument, to the same extent as if the defeasance had been incorporated in the instrument, and will have the effect of making the instrument a mortgage.²⁰

Where an execution creditor, instead of compelling a sale, accepted a bill of sale as security, so as to give the debtor time, the bill of sale must be treated as a mortgage.—In re Schilling, D.C.Ohio, 251 F. 972.

Loan or forbearance of money as consideration

A transfer of personality, although absolute on its face, will be assumed and held to be a mortgage, where it is shown that there is no other consideration for the transfer than a loan or forbearance of money.—Hays v. Bashor, 185 P. 814, 108 Wash. 491.

Oral agreements

(1) Oral agreement that a bill of sale, absolute in form, is to be held as security for the seller's indebtedness is sufficient to constitute the instrument a mortgage.—Clark v. Williams, 76 N.E. 723, 190 Mass. 219.

(2) Oral agreement that bill of sale under seal should be held as security made transaction simple contract, and was in substance a valid mortgage.—Hill v. Scott, 143 A. 276, 101 Vt. 356.

Reservation of secret lien

Where transaction between buyer and seller is absolute sale, written contracts reserving secret lien constitute a mortgage.—Anglo-American Mill Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 230 P. 118, 76 Colo. 57.

14. "It is upon equitable principles that a bill of sale is transformed to an equitable mortgage, and, while the remedy is in equity, the parties or their legal representatives may accept the instrument as an equitable mortgage, and govern and conform the assertion and settlement of their respective rights and liabilities with reference to the actual relation between them of debtor and of creditor, with a pledge of property having been given, and received as security for the debt."—State v. As bill of sale to secure debt

(1) Under a statutory provision that a bill of sale to secure a debt, accompanied by a defeasance, shall pass title until the debt is paid, an instrument, without a defeasance clause or words which could be construed as having that effect, which conveys personality as security, and contains an obligation to reconvey on payment of the debt, is not a mortgage, but a bill of sale to secure a debt, and passes title until the debt is paid.—Watts v. Wight Inv. Co., 103 S.E. 184, 25 Ga.App. 291—Hill v. Marshall, 90 S.E. 175, 18 Ga.App. 652—Owens v. Bridges, 79 S.E. 225, 13 Ga.App. 419.

(2) This rule applies, where the obligor retains possession, although the bill of sale contains no obligation, on the part of the obligee, to reconvey on payment of the indebtedness.—Jackson v. Parks, 174 S.E. 203, 49 Ga.App. 29.

(3) A provision of such a writing by a borrower that he agrees to hold the property as bailee for the lender until the debt is paid, and not operating as a defeasance on the payment of the debt, does not characterize the instrument as a mortgage.—Tarver v. Beneficial Loan Soc. of Macon, 148 S.E. 288, 39 Ga.App. 646.

feasance changing the character of an absolute bill of sale to a mortgage may rest in parol.²¹ Accordingly, although a written instrument in terms conveys title to a chattel, if, by oral agreement, it is security for the payment of money, and the chattel may be redeemed on the payment thereof, it is a mortgage.²²

Modification by subsequent agreement. A bill of sale intended as such by the parties may be modified by subsequent agreement so as to take effect as a mortgage,²³ but a defeasance clause subsequently made must be based on a new consideration.²⁴

As to third persons. It is well settled that innocent third parties who have been misled by the form of the instrument, with the honest belief that it was indefeasible, have a right to insist that as to them it shall be what on its face it purports to be, and be enforced as such.²⁵ This is also true where the instrument was executed for a fraudulent purpose.²⁶ However, as to third parties with notice that a bill of sale absolute on its face is given to secure a debt, it will be treated as a mortgage,²⁷ and, further, third persons are entitled to show that the real character of the transaction as between the original parties is a mortgage and not an absolute sale.²⁸

§ 7. — Conditional Sales

a. In general

- b. Conditions permitting repurchase
- c. Payment of purchase price as condition
- d. Effect of passing of title

a. In General

A mortgage, although in some respects similar to a conditional sale, is to be distinguished therefrom. In determining whether a transaction is a mortgage or a conditional sale the intention of the parties, as construed from the whole transaction, is controlling; a construction in favor of a mortgage being favored in case of doubt.

Although a mortgage and a conditional sale are, in important respects, governed by the same principles,²⁹ and the relationship between the parties, under the two forms of contract, are in many respects similar, there is a difference between a conditional sale and a mortgage which cannot be ignored by the courts;³⁰ and the distinction is important, since, in the absence of statute, the remedies of a mortgagor and of the seller in a conditional sale are distinct.³¹ A mortgage is in itself regarded in many states as a conditional sale under which title passes to become absolute on nonpayment of the debt or the nonperformance of other obligations secured by it, as announced supra § 1, but it is to be distinguished from sales on other conditions, such as conditions permitting repurchase, as explained infra § 7 b, or conditions that title shall not pass until payment of the purchase money, as explained infra § 7 c.

Conditional sales contracts are "a species of contracts entirely separate and apart from chattel mortgage contracts, or other forms of security."—Smith v. Russell, Iowa, 272 N.W. 121, 124.

31. Mich.—Mills Novelty Co. v. Morett, 254 N.W. 163, 266 Mich. 451.

11 C.J. p 411 note 98.

Distinction stated

Whether instrument is "chattel mortgage" or "conditional sale" is determined by rights and remedies of vendor who may retake goods on default and rescind sale or sue for price and elect to pass property to buyer, if instrument is conditional sale, and who has lien on property with right to reclaim and resell and sue for deficiency, if instrument is chattel mortgage.—Mills Novelty Co. v. Morett, supra.

A distinguishing feature, in some states, is that in case of a conditional sales contract title remains in the seller until payment or performance of the stipulated condition, while in case of a mortgage it is in the buyer or mortgagor until default.³² Another striking difference is that in a mortgage if there is a default in payment there is an equity of redemption which must be foreclosed, while in a conditional sale the condition of payment must be strictly performed.³³

It is frequently difficult to determine whether a particular transaction constitutes a mortgage or a conditional sale,³⁴ and the securing of the payment of the purchase price of an article sold may be the primary object in either case.³⁵ In construing a contract for the purpose of making such a determination, it may be assumed that the seller intends to employ every available remedy in case of the buyer's default.³⁶

The general test to be applied in determining whether the transaction is a mortgage or a conditional sale is this: If the transfer is intended merely to secure an existing indebtedness or loan, it is a mortgage; but if the debt is extinguished, or if the money advanced is not by way of a loan, and the grantor has the privilege of refunding if he pleases and thereby of entitling himself to a reconveyance, the transaction is a conditional sale.³⁷ Where the owner of a motor car, to secure money borrowed, executes a bill of sale thereof to the lender, and the parties then enter into an agreement of conditional sale to the borrower, the consideration for which is the amount of the money borrowed,³⁸ or where the purchaser reconveys the car to

Other statements of distinction

(1) "A conditional sale and a chattel mortgage are inconsistent with one another. A conditional sale exists where the title remains in the vendor. A chattel mortgage may exist only when the title to the property has passed, and the vendee has given the chattel mortgage or lien upon his title as security for the payment of the debt."—In re Parkstone Apartment Co., 220 N.W. 780, 781, 243 Mich. 401.

(2) "A chattel mortgage differs from a conditional sales contract, in that in the former title passes to the mortgagee, whereas in the latter possession is transferred and the title retained."—Kettwig v. Aero Inv. Co., 254 N.W. 629, 630, 191 Minn. 500.

(3) "In the case of a chattel mortgage, the mortgagor transfers his title to the mortgagee as security . . . which title becomes reinvested in the mortgagor upon compliance with the conditions. In a conditional bill of sale contract, the title remains in the seller until the payment of the consideration, or until the other conditions mentioned in the conditional bill of sale contract are performed by the purchaser."—In re Excelsior Macaroni Co., D.C. N.Y., 55 F.2d 406, 407.

11 C.J. p 410 note 96 [a].

Conditional sale distinguished from absolute sale with mortgage back

"There is a real distinction between a conditional sale and an absolute sale with a mortgage back, in that under the former the vendor remains the owner, subject to the vendee's right to acquire the title by complying with the stipulated conditions; while under the latter the vendee immediately becomes the owner, subject to the lien created by the mortgage."

As loan contract

Conditional sales contract entered into by borrower and lender, taking personality as security for loan and receiving interest, will be construed as loan contract.—Turney v. Goldberg's Loan Office, 274 P. 464, 135 Okl. 147.

Transfer of notes and agreement

A conditional seller's transfer of purchase-money notes and conditional sales agreement as security for the payment of a debt owed by him operates as a mortgage as between the parties.—J. H. Gerlach Co. v. Noyes, 147 N.E. 24, 251 Mass. 558, 45 A.L.R. 961.

Floor plan contract

Where a motor vehicle dealer executes a contract, denominated a bill of sale, to an investment company to which the motor vehicles on being received from the factory are resold, and the investment company in turn reconsigns the vehicles to the dealer the seller as security for the unpaid purchase price or other debt,³⁹ the transaction is a mortgage.

Further tests. Further tests which are employed in determining whether the transaction is a mortgage or a conditional sale are a consideration of the adequacy or inadequacy of consideration, an inadequate consideration tending to establish a mortgage,⁴⁰ especially when coupled with the financial embarrassment of the grantor or mortgagor,⁴¹ and the existence or extinguishment of the debt, the extinguishment of the debt tending to establish a conditional sale.⁴² Another determining question is, whose loss it will be if the thing is destroyed; if that of the maker of the instrument, then it is a mortgage, but if it is the loss of the payee, it is a conditional sale.⁴³

Intention of the parties. Whether a transaction constitutes a mortgage or a conditional sale ultimately depends on the intention of the parties, which must be ascertained from their conduct and the attendant circumstances, as well as from the terms of the agreement,⁴⁴ and if the intent is not clear, ambiguities will be resolved against the party who selected and relied on the language of the contract,⁴⁵ or who has proffered the instrument,⁴⁶ and as against the seller's right to assert a secret lien against innocent purchasers and creditors.⁴⁷

Further, the intention must be ascertained from

on what is known as the "floor plan," and through the transaction the dealer obtains money to pay for the vehicles from the investment company, and concurrently with the execution of the floor plan contract and as a part thereof the dealer executes his acceptance of a ninety-day draft for the amount of money advanced to him, by the investment company, the transaction constitutes a mortgage.—In re Baumgartner, C. Adequacy as dependent on market value

Whether price paid for paintings was adequate, in determining whether transaction was a conditional sale or a mortgage, depends on market value and not intrinsic value.—Yousoupoff v. Widener, 215 N.Y.S. 24, 126 Misc. 491, affirmed 219 N.Y.S. 942, 219 App.Div. 712, affirmed 158 N.E. 64, 246 N.Y. 174.

Conclusiveness

That price is inadequate would be almost conclusive evidence that contract of sale with right to repurchase is a mortgage, but if it is adequate it is just as strong evidence that it is a sale.—Yousoupoff v. Widener, supra.

"If vendors intend to enjoy the protection of a secret lien as against innocent purchasers and creditors, the contract should speak so clearly that it is removed from the field of doubt, and if, by the omission or the entire transaction and not from any particular feature of it,⁴⁸ and from the actual agreement of the parties and not from their characterization of it,⁴⁹ although the construction placed on the contract by the parties may properly be considered.⁵⁰ The form of the instrument is of little importance.⁵¹

A contract of conditional sale will not be regarded as a mortgage merely because it is recorded as such,⁵² or has an affidavit attached which is required only as to mortgages.⁵³ Further, an instrument which is otherwise a conditional sales contract will not be regarded as a mortgage because of the mere fact that it contains an acceleration clause,⁵⁴

or a clause requiring the buyer to keep the property insured for the seller's benefit,⁵⁵ or requiring him to pay attorney's fees in case the seller is required to employ one to recover the property or unpaid purchase money;⁵⁶ nor because of the fact that the seller takes promissory notes for the balance of the purchase price,⁵⁷ or that attached matter provides that the notes shall be secured by a mortgage on the property,⁵⁸ or that an absolute negotiable note is given for the price, and the buyer agrees to pay the taxes and reimburse the seller for any taxes assessed against him,⁵⁹ or that the seller accepts renewal notes obligating the buyer to pay the balance remaining after sale of the property or the expenses of collection if the property is destroyed.⁶⁰

shuffling of words, they seek to secure the advantages incident to the construction of the instrument as either a chattel mortgage or conditional sale contract, as ultimately will be most advantageous, such an agreement should be construed most strongly against the right of the vendor to assert his claimed lien. Certainly, in the absence of a specific reservation of title, such contract should not be construed as a conditional sale contract, unless the intention of the parties as therein expressed and the rights and remedies therein provided are clearly consistent with such construction."—In re Thomas-Daggett Co., supra.

Construction as mortgage favored. The inclination of the courts in doubtful cases is to construe the transaction as a mortgage rather than as a conditional sale, for the reason that an error which converts a conditional contract of sale into a mortgage is less harmful than one which converts a mortgage into a conditional sale,⁶¹ provided this is not contrary to the clearly expressed intention of the parties;⁶² therefore, if the parties have chosen to make the transaction a conditional sale and to subject themselves to the statutory restrictions relating to such contracts, it cannot be contended that it constitutes a mortgage.⁶³ Where an instrument is in form a conditional sale, and alleged, in a bill to enforce it, to be a conditional sale, it will not, on demurrer, be held a mortgage; and if circumstances making it in fact a mortgage do not appear from the bill, they must be set up by plea or answer.⁶⁴

Statutory provisions. Statutes providing that all deeds of conveyance, obligations conditioned or defeasible, bills of sale, or other instruments in writing conveying or selling personal property to secure the payment of money shall be deemed mortgages, and shall be subject to the same rules of foreclosure and the same regulations, restraints, and forms prescribed for mortgages, should be liberally construed to carry out the legislative intent.⁶⁵ A statutory provision that the statute relating to chattel mortgages shall apply, when not inconsistent, to conditional sales, does not make a conditional sale a mortgage.⁶⁶ A statute requiring a mortgage, when paid, to be satisfied, is inapplicable to a conditional bill of sale, where there is nothing to indicate an intention to give a mortgage;⁶⁷ and it has been held that a statutory provision, making a reservation of title as security for the purchase price a mortgage, does not apply under another statute making void mortgages on stocks of goods daily exposed for sale.⁶⁸ A statute regulating conditional sales does not apply where the parties make an absolute sale with a mortgage back to secure the purchase price.⁶⁹

The effect of a condition permitting the seller to repurchase the property, as affecting the character of the transaction as a mortgage or a conditional sale, is controlled by the intention of the parties as ascertained from the whole transaction.

A bill of sale with an agreement permitting a repurchase of the property by the seller may be such as to constitute either a mortgage or a conditional sale, its character depending on the surrounding circumstances and the intention of the parties,⁷⁰ a test generally accepted as decisive being the mutuality and reciprocity of the remedies of the parties.⁷¹

The fact that a bill of sale contains an agreement to resell the property to the seller at a fixed price or confers upon him an option to repurchase it does not, in itself, establish that the transaction is a

Under English law governing its construction, a contract whereby plaintiff "sold and delivered" two paintings for a fair price, with the right to repurchase within a specified time for a specified price, plus interest to the date of repurchase, on condition that his financial condition permits repurchase for his personal use, and that, in case, of repurchase, plaintiff would resell the paintings to defendant if at any time within ten years after purchase plaintiff or his representatives should care to dispose of them, constitutes a contract of sale with the right to repurchase, and not a mortgage.—*Yousoupoff v. mortgage,⁷² especially when there is no debt to be secured and no obligation to repay.⁷³ The transfer, however, may be shown to be a mortgage by evidence that the seller's obligation continued,⁷⁴ that he bound himself to pay interest,⁷⁵ that the bill of sale was given to secure a loan,⁷⁶ or that the amount of consideration was inadequate as a purchase price.⁷⁷

c. Payment of Purchase Price as Condition

- (1) In general
- (2) Delivery or retention of possession
- (3) Option as to payment of purchase price
- (4) Permission to retake and sell property
- (5) Security for further obligations

(1) In General

By the weight of authority, a sale on condition that the title shall remain in the seller until the purchase price is fully paid is a conditional sale; but there is authority to the effect that such a sale may be shown to be, in fact, a mortgage, and by statute, in some states, such a reservation of title is regarded as a mortgage.

Where a contract of sale expressly provides that the title shall remain in the seller until the purchase price has been paid, the transaction is, according to the weight of authority, to be construed, between the parties at least, as a conditional sale, and not a mortgage;⁷⁸ and this rule applies where the seller of a motor vehicle reserves title until the purchase price has been paid.⁷⁹ In the absence of anything in the instrument inconsistent with a conditional sale, the condition for reservation of title should be given its primary and natural meaning as denoting such a sale,⁸⁰ even though it stipulates that it is a mortgage,⁸¹ and even though the con-

For amount paid plus interest

That contract provides for repurchase for amount paid plus interest does not necessarily indicate mortgage instead of sale with right to repurchase.—Youssoupoff v. Widener, 215 N.Y.S. 24, 126 Misc. 491, affirmed 219 N.Y.S. 942, 219 App.Div. 712, affirmed 158 N.E. 64, 246 N.Y. 174.

Instrument held conditional sales

An instrument executed by buyer of personalty to seller, agreeing that title is to remain in seller until paid for, and that buyer, on default of payment of notes when due, shall be responsible for delivery to seller, and shall hold property as bailee for hire, is not a bill of sale from buyer to the seller, but is a conditional sale by seller to buyer, it being a contract of sale with a reservation of title to secure the indebtedness; and it is not converted into a bill of sale from buyer to seller by additional provision that buyer sells, transfers, and conveys property to seller and warrants the title.—Kelley v. tract contains no provision for retaking the property in case of default.⁸²

According to some decisions, however, a reservation of title until the purchase price has been paid is not conclusive of the character of the transaction, and it may be shown to be a mortgage by other provisions in the instrument or by the surrounding circumstances,⁸³ as where the contract imports an intention to retain title merely as security,⁸⁴ and the taking and holding of additional security and the enforcement of statutory liens are not inconsistent with such a reservation as security.⁸⁵ A contract of sale of an automobile wherein the seller retains title to secure the payment of the purchase price is a mortgage,⁸⁶ or at least may be regarded and treated as such at the election of the seller, and when such election is made it is binding and vests title in the purchaser, subject to a lien for the purchase money.⁸⁷ The fact that the one claiming the contract to be a conditional sales contract seeks by action to recover possession only does not import that the transaction was a conditional sale rather than a mortgage;⁸⁸ and in any event it would seem that, to enable a conditional seller to enforce his claim of title to the property on nonpayment of the price, he must have been in fact the owner of the property and must have made a bona fide sale thereof to a bona fide purchaser, by which the actual possession was changed in fact.⁸⁹ An

Contracts held to be mortgages

(1) A contract of sale, whereby the seller retains title, with the usual reserved rights of taking possession, until the debt is fully discharged, amounts to nothing more than a mortgage by the purchaser to secure the unpaid purchase price, provided the purchaser himself duly executes the contract.—Cable Piano Co. v. Lewis, 243 S.W. 924, 195 Ky. 666.

(2) An order for goods, stating title should remain in plaintiff until paid for as per note and mortgage, showed reservation of title by mortgage, rather than by conditional sale pleaded.—Skates v. Perkins, 141 So. 687, 225 Ala. 33—Perkins v. Skates, 124 So. 514, 220 Ala. 216.

(3) A contract under which store fixtures were delivered to bankrupt, in which he was called "buyer" and the other party "seller," and by which he was absolutely obligated to pay the "purchase price" in installments, with interest, which also contained a provision retaining title in the seller until full payment, with the option in case of default to rescind the contract, or affirm and sue "as for a breach," constituted a conveyance of title with a reservation, intended to operate as a mortgage.—In re Ames, D.C.Mich., 283 F. 465, reversed, C.C.A., 289 F. 208. 11 C.J. p 414 note 23 [a].

Property to "stand good for debt"

An agreement complete on its face for the sale of a car and the payment of the purchase price in deferred installments which contains the provision, "car stands good for the debt," does not amount to a reservation of title, and creates a lien only.—Yale Auto. Co. v. Walker, 224 S.W. 632, 145 Ark. 344.

As absolute sale with retention of lien as security

(2) An instrument purporting to reserve title in seller, and also to give seller right of action to recover the debt without passing title, will be construed to make an absolute sale with the reservation of a lien by way of security, the two provisions being inconsistent.—Peter Schuttler Co. v. As against bona fide purchaser of car

Where retail automobile dealer bought automobile for cash, and bill of lading was sent with draft attached, and defendant paid draft and delivered bill of lading to dealer, and next day gave dealer conditional bill of sale to secure the money election by the seller, as permitted by the contract, to take a mortgage does not terminate the title retention provision until a valid mortgage has been delivered and filed.⁹⁰

Statutory provisions in some states place all reservations of title as security for the payment of the purchase price of chattels on the general footing of mortgages.⁹¹

Same instrument as conditional sale and mortgage. The same instrument may evidence a conditional sale of specific chattels retaining title in the seller until payment is made and a mortgage of other property for further security as to the payment of the purchase price;⁹² but the relation of conditional seller and buyer and of mortgagor and mortgagee cannot subsist as to the same property at the same time.⁹³

Equitable relief. Where a contract of conditional sale reserves title to the property in the seller until it is fully paid for, and gives the seller the right to declare a forfeiture on default of payment, a court of equity has power under some circumstances to declare such contract a mere security, and to protect the purchaser from unconscionable forfeiture.⁹⁴

Rights of third persons. A contract which by its terms is a mortgage, ordinarily cannot be a conditional sale between the parties and a mortgage when the rights of third persons are involved.⁹⁵ A third person, however, may be entitled in equity to assert that what between the parties is a conditional sale is as to him a mortgage, but this will be permitted only on equitable grounds, and to prevent fraud.⁹⁶

(2) Delivery or Retention of Possession

A conditional sale with retention of possession by the seller is in effect a chattel mortgage. If possession is delivered to the buyer, by some decisions, it may be regarded as a conditional sale, but other decisions are to the contrary.

A conditional sale contract of personal property the possession of which remains in the seller is in effect a chattel mortgage.⁹⁷

The fact that the possession of the property is delivered to the buyer will not prevent a transaction from being regarded as a conditional sale where title is reserved in the seller until payment,⁹⁸ and the purchaser may be given the possession and use of the property for the purpose of securing funds with which to pay the purchase price.⁹⁹ It has also been held to be a conditional sale where the chattels are deposited with a trustee to be returned to the seller on the payment of a specified amount.¹ A conditional sale, however, accompanied advanced, insufficient as a chattel mortgage, which bill was recorded, the transaction was void as against plaintiff, a bona fide purchaser.—Lyon v. Nourse, 176 P. 359, 104 Wash. 309.

As condition of settlement

Where to adjust difficulties between the parties and terminate pending litigation, complainant entered into a contract with the principal defendant whereby securities, deeds, and releases of claims were

by delivery has been held to pass title to the buyer with a lien to the seller for the unpaid purchase money,² and it will not be regarded as a conditional sale, instead of a mortgage, because of a provision that in case of default the buyer's possession shall be that of bailee for the seller;³ and even though the contract reserves title, if it is followed by a delivery of possession on the execution of a mortgage for the unpaid purchase price, the delivery of possession is a transfer of title subject to the mortgage, and not a conditional sale.⁴

(3) Option as to Payment of Purchase Price

By the weight of authority, a transaction may be a conditional sale notwithstanding the buyer is obligated absolutely to pay the purchase price.

According to the weight of authority, a transaction may constitute a conditional sale, although the purchaser is obligated absolutely to pay the purchase price;⁵ but in some jurisdictions a contrary view is taken,⁶ and under this view, where notes are given for the purchase price, it is held to evidence an absolute sale with a chattel mortgage back.⁷

(4) Permission to Retake and Sell Property

By some decisions a contract may be a conditional sale although it authorizes the seller, on the buyer's default, to take possession of the chattel, sell it, and account for any surplus or hold the buyer responsible for any deficiency; but there is authority to the contrary.

The transaction may be construed as a conditional sale, although it contains the provision usually found in chattel mortgages authorizing the seller, on default of payment, to take possession of the property, sell it, and account to the purchaser for any surplus over the amount to be paid,⁸ or hold him responsible for any deficiency in the purchase price.⁹ According to some decisions, however, such a provision is a strong, if not in fact a controlling, indication of the intention of the parties that the title shall pass depriving the transaction of its character as a conditional sale, and making it, at least in effect, a mortgage.¹⁰ deposited with a trustee under an agreement that if complainant should pay a large sum of money within six months they should be returned to him, and, if not, they should become the absolute property of the principal defendant, the contract must be deemed a conditional sale of the securities and claims deposited with the trustee.—Graham v. Contracts held mortgages

(1) Where the purchaser of an automobile enters into a conditional sales contract, authorizing the seller to retake possession on the purchaser's default, and sell it and charge the purchaser with the costs, attorney's fees, and deficiency, and further authorizing concurrent remedies, the contract is in effect a mortgage, and title passes to the purchaser at the time the contract is made, entitling him to sue for damages at the time he was in de-

The distinction has been made that if, under the contract, the seller, on default of the buyer, may retake the property, retain payments made and, by acceleration of other payments, recover any deficiency in the contract price, the transaction is not a conditional sale, but is at least in effect a mortgage.¹¹ If, however, it is apparent either from the contract or the surrounding circumstances that these remedies are alternative and not cumulative, that is, that the seller may either recover possession or recover the unpaid purchase price, but not both, it is a conditional sale;¹² and this is also true where on retaking the property, the seller may sue only for its rental value or for the nonperformance of the contract.¹³ The contract, in such a case, is not converted into a mortgage by the fact that the seller has an election, on retaking possession, to retain part payments, already made, as liquidated damages,¹⁴ or by a clause subjecting the chattel to a lien for insurance premiums paid by the seller.¹⁵

He may, on default, repossess the property, and, if he so desires, sell it; but he cannot take the property and also pursue the purchaser for the debt. When he elects to retake the property as owner, this necessarily precludes any recovery of the balance due on the debt."—Voges v. Ward, 123 So. 785, 794, 98 Fla. 304.

(5) Security for Further Obligations

A transaction may be a conditional sale although the property is to stand as security for other obligations.

An agreement may be construed as a conditional sale although it contains a stipulation that, in case the buyer shall make other purchases, the property in question shall stand as security for the price,¹⁶ or that it shall stand as security for other debts.¹⁷ On the other hand it has been held that where the seller may retain title until not only the contract price but also other debts are paid, and may sue and obtain judgment and yet retain title, it constitutes a chattel mortgage.¹⁸

Where title is passed to the buyer the transaction generally constitutes a mortgage.

A distinction sometimes made is that in a conditional sale title to the property remains in the seller, while a mortgage assumes title in the mortgagor with a lien in favor of the mortgagee.¹⁹ Where, therefore, the intention is evident that the title shall pass to the buyer, the transaction is a mortgage and cannot be regarded as a conditional sale;²⁰ hence, where goods are delivered to the buyer under an agreement whereby the property and the goods are transferred with the reservation of a lien to secure the purchase price, the transaction is a mortgage.²¹ An assignment of his interest by the conditional seller of a motor vehicle to secure a debt transfers title subject to the right of redemption by the conditional buyer, and is in effect

The passing of title, however, is dependent on the nature of the condition relative thereto, whether it is precedent or subsequent; if it is precedent, and remains so regardless of subsequent events, except the right to pass title by suit for the agreed purchase price, it is consonant with a conditional sale; but, if it is subsequent, to be ruled by events, and remedies are open to enforce payment of the purchase price with the chattel as a security, it is security in the nature of a mortgage.²³ Accordingly where a contract, under which property is transferred with reservation of title, provides that the seller may enforce payment of the purchase price without passing title to the purchaser, it is not a conditional sale, but an absolute sale with reservation of a lien as security.²⁴

§ 8. — Lease

A clause in a lease reserving a lien for rent and other indebtedness on personality is generally held to be, at least in effect, a mortgage. A lease of personal property is not a mortgage, unless it is given as security.

A clause in a lease reserving a lien for rent, on crops or personal property on the premises, does not necessarily change the nature of the instrument and cause it to become a chattel mortgage;²⁵ but where such a clause is inserted, as providing security for rent or other indebtedness, it has generally been held that the instrument operates as a mortgage or is in legal effect a mortgage of such property,²⁶ and this rule applies where the lien is reserved on exempt property of the tenant.²⁷ A provision in a farm lease reserving title to, or giving a lien on, the tenant's share of the crop as security for his indebtedness to the landowner is, in effect, a mortgage.²⁸

A lease of personalty for a fixed term, reserving title in the lessor, is not a mortgage.²⁹ A contract for the lease of personal property for a rental, the aggregate installments of which equal the stipulated value of the article, has been held to be a conditional sale and not a mortgage,³⁰ although substantially similar contracts in contemplation of a sale of the property and to secure payment thereof, have been held to be chattel mortgages.³¹

§ 9. — Trust Receipts; Deeds of Trust

A "trust receipt" is an instrument whereby a banker advancing money for the purchase of merchandise takes and retains title thereto in his own name, as security until the amount advanced has been repaid, and delivers possession of the merchandise to the customer to hold in trust for the banker until such time. The transaction is generally regarded by the later decisions as a mortgage. A chattel mortgage may also be in the form of a deed of trust.

A "trust receipt" is a well-known instrument in common use whereby an arrangement, more or less frequent in modern business relations, is made by which a banker, advancing money to enable a customer to purchase merchandise, takes the title or bill of lading in his own name and thereafter surrenders possession to the customer, who gives a trust receipt, under which it is agreed that the title to the merchandise shall remain in the banker as security until he is repaid the amount advanced, and that the proceeds of any sale of the merchandise shall be applied to the repayment of the advances made by the banker on account of the original purchase price.³² This form of transaction was originally employed in the importing trade, but has come into quite general use in the marketing of motor vehicles, where the purchase of cars by a dealer from a manufacturer or distributor is financed by a corporation which advances the purchase price in whole or in part.³³ Transactions of this

Reason for rule

It is not a mortgage because title to the property passes directly to the bank or acceptance corporation, and possession of the property does not pass to the dealer until after he has executed a trust receipt, under which the dealer cannot use the property, nor sell, loan, deliver, pledge, mortgage or otherwise dispose of it, until after the payment of amounts shown on the dealer's record of purchase and release.—In re Otto-Johnson Mercantile Co., D.C.N.M., 52 F.2d 678, 680.

Criticism of mortgage theory

The theory that a trust receipt transaction constitutes a mortgage "hardly seems a logical position for these reasons: Where the finance company secured its legal title from pledge,⁴⁴ or conditional sale,⁴⁵ but there is authority for regarding the transaction as a conditional sale, or in the nature thereof.⁴⁶ In other cases, the transaction has been regarded as a species of bailment, as announced in the title Bailments § 3 b, or as creating an anomalous contract relation.⁴⁷ By the weight of authority, however, as expressed in modern decisions, a trust receipt transaction is generally regarded as a mortgage,⁴⁸ particularly where, under the circumstances, title never passed to the banker;⁴⁹ and, accordingly, a transaction whereby a dealer receives motor vehicles from a manufacturer or distributor and executes a trust receipt to a banker or finance company as security for money advanced for unpaid purchase money has been held, at least in effect, a mortgage.⁵⁰

the wholesale automobile distributor, the dealer's position under a trust receipt cannot be that of a mortgagor for he never had legal title and never conveyed it to the so-called mortgagee. Moreover, the mortgagee may regain possession only on default, whereas the trust receipt permits repossession of the car at any time. This is also contrary to the theory on which has been developed the law of trust receipts in their original field as governing the relation of an importer of goods to his banker who buys from the foreign seller and takes title to himself."—Handy v. C. I. T. Corporation, 197 N.E. 64, 291 Mass. 157, 101 A.L.R. 447.

Motor vehicle transaction

Transaction whereby dealer received automobiles from distributor, after executing trust receipt in which dealer agreed to hold automobiles in trust for credit corporation which financed transaction, was not "chattel mortgage" invalid as against dealer's receiver, although credit corporation never had possession.—*Armstrong v. Conditional sale and trust receipt distinguished

"In this connection the difference between these transactions and true conditional sales is apparent. In cases of true conditional sale, where it has been held that the vendor having reclaimed and sold the goods cannot afterwards sue for his deficiency, it is pointed out by the courts that by retaking the goods the whole consideration has failed or been terminated, and that there is no further consideration upon which to sue. . . . When a banker advances money for the purchase of goods the result is different, because the consideration is different. The consideration is not the supplying of goods, but the supplying of funds. The goods themselves are no essential element in the contract, being merely security for its execution. . . . Certainly a banker never intends that the amount of his recovery shall depend upon the value of the goods. He is concerned only with getting back his advance, with interest and commissions. That is his business. Just as he has to return any surplus after a sale of the security, so he has a right of action for any deficiency which may result. It is clear enough that in the ordinary case, where the banker has not parted with possession of the goods under trust receipt or otherwise and is forced to realize upon them at a loss, he is entitled to claim for a deficiency, and there is no reason why, because he has given them up and retaken them, his rights should be any less. If further illustration were needed of the difference between the transaction in question and a conditional sale, it can be found in this view of it: At whose risk is the property from the inception of the transaction? No one will pretend that if the goods were destroyed . . . without insurance (there being no agreement for insurance) the loss would fall upon the bank. Yet, if the transaction were a conditional sale, the risk of loss would be upon the bank until it delivered the goods to the importer."—*Charavay & Bodvin v. York Silk Mfg. Distinctions. The difference between the true trust receipt situation and the ordinary mortgage is the fact that in the trust receipt title passes to the banker from the seller of the goods as security for the debt of a third party, while in the ordinary mortgage title passes to the mortgagee directly from the party owing the debt.⁵¹

A pledge is distinguishable from a trust receipt or special form of "security title," apart from any common-law form of security, which is given as security for advances of the purchase price of imports and arises out of the modern conditions of trade and commerce, and which is not dependent on possession of the goods imported.⁵²

Deed of trust. One of the common forms which a mortgage takes is a deed of trust, and the fact that the transfer assumes this form does not affect the nature of the transaction or make it any the less a mortgage.⁵³ Furthermore, a trust deed like a common-law mortgage passes the legal title in those jurisdictions in which a mortgage so operates.⁵⁴

§ 10. — Power

An instrument giving a creditor the right to take possession, sell, and apply the proceeds to a debt is a mere power and not a mortgage.

An instrument giving a creditor a right to take possession of goods, to sell them, and to apply the proceeds to the satisfaction of a debt, is not a mortgage but a mere power, for it transfers no title.⁵⁵

- b. Admissibility

Transactions held mortgages

(1) "A trust receipt, accompanied by the obligation of the receiptor, to pay an agreed price for an automobile, possession of which is changed, and which permits suit upon the obligation accompanying the trust receipt or the retaking and resale of the car, with application of proceeds in reduction of obligation to pay and right to hold the receiptor for the balance, is security in the nature of a chattel mortgage."—Motor Bankers' Corporation v. C. I. T. Corporation, 241 N.W. 911, 912, 258 Mich. 301.

(2) A trust receipt stating that the dealer agrees to hold motor vehicles in trust for a finance company as its property and to return any and all of the vehicles to the finance company on demand, and that the finance company might at any time cancel the trust and take possession of the vehicles without notice or demand, constitutes a mortgage, since the finance company has nothing to do with the sale of the vehicles to the dealer and it has no arrangement with either the seller or the bank to which the price draft was forwarded with respect to payment thereof.—McLeod Nash Motors v. Commercial Credit Trust, 246 N.W. 17, 187 Minn. 452, 87 A.L.R. 296.

Construction

In determining meaning and intent of parties to transaction whereby automobile dealer received automobiles from distributor and executed trust receipt and note to finance company for unpaid portion of purchase price, court would look beyond the form and from evidence determine what was the real transaction.—General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Seattle Ass'n of Credit Men, 67 P.2d 882, 190 Wash. 284.

Fleeting and proof

Where an action to enforce a superior lien on motor vehicles under trust receipts proceeds expressly on the theory that plaintiff holds only a mortgage, the action is governed by the rule that a transaction designed to hold personal property as mere security for a debt is regarded as a mortgage, regardless of its name or form, and a different legal status of trust receipt need not be considered.—General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Sharp Motor Sales Co., 25 S.W.2d 405, 233 Ky. 290.

The presumption is that the instrument is what, on its face, it purports to be,⁵⁶ and the burden of rebutting this presumption lies on him who asserts the contrary.⁵⁷

b. Admissibility

Parol evidence is admissible to show whether the transaction in question was intended to be a mortgage, but not to vary its terms. A bill of sale, absolute on its face, may generally be shown by parol or extrinsic evidence to be in fact a mortgage.

Under the rule that parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of explaining and showing the true nature and character of the transaction evidenced by a written contract, as announced in the C.J.S. title Evidence § 1015, also 22 C.J. p 1259 note 95, it is generally held that parol testimony is admissible to show that the real purpose of the parties to a transfer was that it should operate as a mortgage, but it is inadmissible to vary the terms of the writing.⁵⁸ So, where the question is whether the transaction constitutes a mortgage or a conditional sale, if the intention is not clearly expressed in the written instrument, and this is not the whole contract of the parties, parol evidence is admissible to show what their real agreement was;⁵⁹ and this is true also in case of a writing in the nature of a bill of parcels or receipt, and not of a bill of sale.⁶⁰ Where, however, an instrument is, from its face, clearly a mortgage, parol evidence is inadmissible to show it to be something different.⁶¹

Absolute bill of sale as mortgage. As a general rule, parol or extrinsic evidence is admissible in equity to show that a bill of sale, absolute on its face, is in fact a mortgage,⁶² although there are decisions which apparently confine the rule to cases in which there is an allegation of fraud,⁶³ and under the express provisions of some statutes, where a bill of sale is absolute on its face and is accompanied by possession of the property, the parties cannot prove it to be a mortgage by parol evidence unless fraud in its procurement is the issue to be tried.⁶⁴

In actions at law in some states, parol evidence is not admissible to show that an absolute bill of sale is in fact a mortgage;⁶⁵ but the more generally accepted rule is in favor of the admission of such evidence,⁶⁶ particularly under statutes allowing equitable defenses to be asserted in actions at law,⁶⁷ and under code provisions abolishing the distinctions between actions at law and in equity.⁶⁸ However, it has been held that although a stranger to the transaction may at law assert and produce evidence to prove the transaction to have been a mortgage,⁶⁹ parol evidence is not admissible at law for such purpose as against a third person not a party to the transaction.⁷⁰

The principle on which parol evidence is admitted in these cases is similar to that under which extrinsic evidence is admitted to establish a resulting trust as against an absolute deed,⁷¹ and it is not received for the purpose of contradicting the terms of the instrument but to raise an equity paramount to its mere form.⁷²

Where parol evidence is regarded as admissible, it is proper to show the circumstances under which the instrument was made;⁷³ the practical construction given to it by the parties;⁷⁴ all the facts of the transaction;⁷⁵ conversations between the parties at the time;⁷⁶ whether or not it has been filed as a chattel mortgage;⁷⁷ the disposition of the property by the parties;⁷⁸ the value of the property transferred;⁷⁹ and the retention or cancellation of the debt,⁸⁰ but not of transactions with third persons.⁸¹

mortgage and not a conditional sale.⁸⁴ It has been held, however, that this rule applies only in equity where the cause is tried to the chancellor, and that where questions of fact are submitted to a jury they are to be determined by the simple preponderance of the evidence;⁸⁵ and it has also been held that it does not require the same strictness of proof to declare a bill of sale, or an instrument in the form of a conditional sale, to be a mortgage as it does to determine a deed to be a mortgage.⁸⁶ There is also authority for the statement that even in equity if there is a reasonable doubt as to whether a transfer is a mortgage or an absolute conveyance it will be held to be a mortgage.⁸⁷

§ 12. — Questions of Law and Fact

The intention of the parties as to whether the instrument or transaction constitutes a mortgage is generally a question of fact.

Where the evidence is conflicting or of a doubtful nature, the intention of the parties, as controlling the character of the transaction when disputed, presents a question of fact which, in cases tried to a jury, is to be determined by the jury under appropriate instructions,⁸⁸ as, for example, the determination of whether a transaction is a mortgage or an absolute sale,⁸⁹ a conditional sale,⁹⁰ or a pledge.⁹¹ If, on the other hand, the entire contract of the parties is contained in a written instrument, and the language thereof is clear, its construction as to whether it is in legal effect a mortgage is a question of law for the court.⁹²

II. WHAT LAW GOVERNS

§ 13. In General

Where the parties reside and the property is located at the place where the mortgage is executed, the law of that place governs its validity, construction, and effect.

Where the parties reside, and the property is located, at the place where the mortgage is executed, its validity, construction, and effect are determined by the law of that place,⁹³ unless there is no evi-

Parol evidence

(1) Parol evidence must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing that writing, absolute on its face, was intended as mortgage only.—Central Chemical Co. v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Corporation, 163 A. 279, 114 N.J.Eq. 48—Coke v. Shull, 16 A. 434, 45 N.J.Eq. 208.

(2) Parol testimony of a witness, who does not appear to be an attorney at law or one versed in, and familiar with, the niceties of legal definitions and distinctions, that a bill of sale to described property was executed, does not by itself alone demand the inference that the instrument conveyed and passed title to the property.—Wilson v. Voche, 172 S.E. 672, 48 Ga.App. 173.

Evidence that purchaser was never willing to make loan on the merchandise bought has been held sufficient to negative the contention that, although the contract was in form a sale with a limited repurchase option, it was intended by the parties to be a mere loan on security.—Youssoupoff v. Widener, 158 N.E. 64, 246 N.Y. 174, affirming 219 N.Y.S. 942, 219 App.Div. 712, which affirmed 215 N.Y.S. 24, 126 Misc. 491.

Bill of sale of motor vehicle

Where an automobile dealer gave a bill of sale to an automobile to one to whom he was indebted, and the purchaser registered the car in his name and procured fire and theft insurance thereon, but left the car in the show rooms of the dealer, who subsequently sold and delivered the car to another creditor, in an action for the car, the court ruled correctly in refusing to nonsuit or direct a verdict for defendant, and in submitting to the jury the question whether the bill of sale given was an absolute bill of sale, or a conditional bill of sale in the nature of a mortgage.—Thoss v. Olb, 121 A. 707, 98 N.J.Law 842.

dence as to the law of such place;⁹⁴ and the general rule applies to the validity and operation of the mortgage as to after-acquired property.⁹⁵ A statute requiring mortgages to be executed in a prescribed manner,⁹⁶ or requiring mortgages or other instruments dealing with personal property to be recorded where the mortgagors reside,⁹⁷ does not apply to mortgages made in another state where the parties and the property are at the time, the lex loci contractus governing in such cases.

§ 14. Property Not Present at Place of Execution or Domicile of Parties

The validity, operation, and effect of a mortgage, executed in one state by parties resident or present therein, on property located in another state is, as a general rule, governed by the law of the state where the property is located.

While, as announced in the C.J.S. title Conflict of Laws § 18, also 12 C.J. p 470 note 12—p 471 note 16, it is often stated that personal property has no situs but follows the domicile of its owner, this fiction of law is ordinarily disregarded in the case of mortgages, and the property is considered as having an actual situs at the place where it is located, hence, where a mortgage is executed in one state by parties resident or present therein, and the property mortgaged is at the time located in another state, it is held, as a general rule, that the law of the state where the property is located will control as to the validity and effect of the mortgage,⁹⁸ the necessity of recording and the effect on creditors of a failure to record,⁹⁹ and as to the question of its priority as between different lienholders.¹ It should be noted that by an application of the lex loci contractus the Conflict of laws not in issue

Where automobiles involved were situated in state and parties intended them to remain therein, bills of sale, trust receipts, and promissory notes were all executed in state, no question of conflict of laws was raised in replevin action.—General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Berry, 187 A. 553, 86 N.H. 280.

Mortgage given by absconder

Where a person owing money absconded from the state, and when pursued gave his debtor a mortgage, while he resided in another state, which was payable in his home state, and agreed to return to that state with the property, but the wife did not sign the mortgage, it nevertheless created a valid lien on the property, since at the time of its execution the mortgagor and his wife were nonresidents and could make no claims to exemptions in their home state, and under the statute of the resident state the wife's signature was not requisite to the validity of the mortgage.—Dickson v. Cooper, 164 N.W. 734, 181 Iowa 337.

Effect of removal of property to another state see infra § 15.

94. Governed by common law of other state

Where, in a case in Massachusetts, loan to take up draft attached to bill of lading was made and trust receipt and mortgage executed and delivered, in New York, but there was no evidence as to law of that state, rights of parties must be determined by common law of Massachusetts.—*Davis v. Mortgage, under mortgage recorded in foreign state in county where property was situated at time, is entitled to property as against subsequent assignee, mortgagee having priority in foreign state.—Davis v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 278 P. 384, 35 Ariz. 392.

courts, in some instances, have reached a conclusion identical in effect with the foregoing application of the lex rei sitae.² Where the owner of property sends it into another state, he impliedly submits to the regulations concerning its transfer in force there, although a different rule of transfer prevails in the jurisdiction where he resides.³

In some states, however, it has been held that the rights of the parties to the mortgage are governed by the law of the state where the mortgage is executed and payable regardless of the situs of the property,⁴ and that where all of the parties live in one state, the situs of the property is there, notwithstanding it is actually located in another state, and if the mortgage is made and recorded in the former state it must be construed as a contract of that state.⁵

§ 15. Removal of Property from State

By weight of authority a mortgage, if valid and properly executed and recorded according to the law of the state where the mortgage is executed and the property at the time is located, will be held valid even as against bona fide creditors and purchasers in another state to which the property is removed by the mortgagor, unless it contravenes the statute or settled law or policy of the forum.

As stated in Corpus Juris, frequently quoted with approval, the weight of authority is to the effect that a mortgage, properly executed and recorded according to the law of the state where the mortgage is executed and the property is located, will, if valid there, be held valid even as against creditors and purchasers in good faith in another state to which the property is removed by the mortgagor, unless the transaction contravenes the statute or settled law or policy of the forum; and under this rule, the due execution and recordation of the mortgage, in the state where made and where the property is located, operates as at least constructive notice of the mortgage lien to all persons dealing with the property in the state to which it is removed, and, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the mortgage is enforceable in the state to which the property has been removed, although it is not recorded there,⁶ and even though the mortgagor's re-

Situs fixed by mortgage

The recording in New York of a chattel mortgage on an automobile delivered in that state, but having its situs fixed in New Jersey by the terms of the mortgage, even though properly recorded there, is not effective to defeat a garage keeper's lien in New Jersey.—*Farmer & Ochs Co. v. moval of the property was felonious.⁷ The general rule, of course, does not apply where the mortgage is not properly executed, filed, and recorded in the state where it is made.⁸ A removal, within the meaning of the general rule, is one of a permanent rather than a merely temporary or transient nature.⁹

The recognition and enforcement of a lien of a mortgage executed in a foreign state is, however, a matter resting purely in comity;¹⁰ and although statutes regulating the execution and recording of mortgages are generally regarded as not applying to personalty brought in the state and which at the time is incumbered by a valid lien elsewhere created,¹¹ a state may by appropriate legislation decline to observe the rule of comity, and may require all mortgages affecting personal property which is situated therein or brought therein to be there recorded, as a condition precedent to the recognition of their validity in that state,¹² and, al-

Other statement of rule

"The American Law Institute, in its Restatement of the Conflict of Laws, § 287, states the rule thus: 'If a chattel is validly mortgaged in accordance with the law of the state where it is situated at the time of the execution of the mortgage and is then taken into another state, the mortgagee's interest in the chattel is recognized in the second state.'"—First Nat. Bank v. Ripley, 215 N.W. 647, 649, 204 Iowa 590.

Interest of mortgagee not divested

If, after a chattel is validly mortgaged, it is taken into another state without the consent of the mortgagee, the interest of the mortgagee is not divested as a result of any dealings with the chattel in the second state.—General Credit Corporation v. Rohde, 187 A. 676, 122 Conn. 100.

Where an automobile purchased in Kansas City, Mo., on which a chattel mortgage duly recorded in Jackson county, Mo., was in force, was left in Kansas garage for repairs for another than the original purchaser, the lien of the chattel mortgage was good.—Willys Overland Co. v. Evans, 180 P. 235, 104 Kan. 632.

Place of recordation

The fact that a car owned by a nonresident of the state is frequently brought to the state where the mortgage is made, and that at the time of the execution thereof it is in fact within the county, does not warrant a finding that it is situated and kept within the county so that recordation of the mortgage therein would be notice to third parties.—Vervaris v. Failure of mortgagee of California live stock to comply with California statutes, requiring certificate of record to be filed with secretary of state, precluded recovery in conversion against innocent purchaser in Nevada.—Southwest Cattle Loan Co. v. Nevada Packing Co., 292 P. 587, 53 Nev. 55.

Occasional trips of motor vehicle not removal

(1) Where a motor vehicle mortgage is recorded in one state, occasional trips across the state line to a neighboring town in another state do not constitute a removal to such other state, requiring recording of the mortgage there.—Flora v. Julesburg Motor Co., 193 P. 545, 69 Colo. 238.

(2) Mortgage, validly executed and legally registered in another state wherein mortgagor resided and property presumptively was situated, is entitled to priority over lien of resident attaching creditor of mortgagor, notwithstanding mortgage holder's knowledge that automobile was being used in making regular trips into another state. — Bankers' Finance Corporation v. Miss.—Vines v. Sparks, 114 So. 322, 148 Miss. 219.

As against creditor or purchaser without notice

(1) Where a car mortgaged in one state is removed into another state, and acquires a situs there, but is not recorded there as required by statute, and a creditor of the car owner, without notice of the mortgage, attaches the car there, he has a superior right over the mortgagee.—Vines v. Sparks, supra.

(2) Where mortgaged personalty was removed from North Carolina, where chattel mortgage was recorded, into Virginia, without recording mortgage there in accordance with Virginia law, bona fide purchaser for value without notice, who bought and paid for personalty in Virginia

though the requirement that an instrument conveying or affecting movable chattels shall be recorded in the place where the property is situated may not be in strict harmony with the common-law doctrine that the disposition of movables is to be governed by the law of the domicile of the owner, it is certainly competent for a state to adopt a modification of this kind to the disposition of any property within its territorial limits.¹³

Mortgagee's consent to, or knowledge of, removal. In some cases, the general rule has been held to apply without regard to the presence or absence of consent or knowledge on the part of the mortgagee as to the removal;¹⁴ but by the better authority it seems that, where the mortgagee has consented to the removal of the property, he will forfeit his right to assert the validity and priority of his lien unless he takes such steps as are required for its protection by the statutes of the state into which the property is removed,¹⁵ or unless he records his mortgage in the state to which the property is removed,¹⁶ or ships the property in his own name;¹⁷ and this general rule has been applied where the mortgagee has knowledge of, although he does not actually consent to, the removal and fails to assert his rights under the mortgage within a reasonable time.¹⁸

Minority rule. In a few states, however, the doctrines of the general rule, as announced above, are not recognized, and unless a foreign mortgage has the advantage of prior recordation within the state to which the property is removed, the rights of the foreign mortgagee will not be upheld as to innocent purchasers and attaching creditors, although the property has been removed from its original location and brought within such states, without his knowledge or consent,¹⁹ and without negligence on and removed it to North Carolina, obtained title free from mortgagee's lien.—W. H. Applewhite Co. v. Etheridge, 187 S.E. 588, 210 N.C. 433.

11 C.J. p 425 note 10.

Reasons for rule

"By such consent the mortgagee negligently places it in the power of the mortgagor to deceive and defraud innocent people in the state into which the property is taken. He should be and he is deemed to have waived his lien against such innocent parties upon the principle that where one of two persons must suffer by reason of the wrongful act of a third, the injury must be borne by him by whose conduct the wrongful act has been made possible."—Moore v. Keystone Driller Co., 163 P. 1114, 30 Idaho 220, L.R.A.1917D 940—11 C.J. p 425 note 10 [al].

Diligence of mortgagee

Where mortgagee knows that mortgagor has removed property from state, he is not required to exercise diligence to recover property.—First Nat. Bank v. Ripley, 215 N.W. 647, 204 Iowa 590.

Evidence of oral consent held admissible

U.S.—Globe Grain & Milling Co. v. De Tweede Northwestern & Pacific Hypotheekbank, C.C.A.Idaho, 69 F.2d 418.

Mortgage on property sold for removal

The validity of a purchase-money mortgage on property, sold for removal to, and possession and enjoyment by, the mortgagor in another state, where he has his domicile, is governed by the laws of the latter state and not by the laws of the state where the mortgage was executed. Except for the recording law of such state, a seller has the right to sell and take back a chattel mortgage for the purchase price of property in one state, for removal to, and possession by, the mortgagor in another state, without giving notice of his lien.—Wertheimer & Degen v. Shultice, 211 N.W. 568, 202 Iowa 1140.

Written consent

(1) An Idaho statute providing that removal of mortgaged chattels from county in which mortgage is recorded shall not affect validity of mortgage unless property is removed by mortgagee's written consent does not regulate rights of parties where removal is from state, but in such case mortgagee's rights are established in state to which property is removed by principle of comity.—

Globe Grain & Milling Co. v. De Tweede Northwestern & Pacific Hypotheekbank, C.C.A.Idaho, 69 F.2d 418.

(2) In an earlier case, however, in the state court it was held that if, under such a statute, the mortgagee gave no written consent to the shipment of mortgaged grain out of the state, although he knew thereof, he did not lose his lien.—Hopkins v. Hemsley, 22 P.2d 138, 53 Idaho 120.

Tenn.—Bankers' Finance Corporation v. Locke & Massey Motor Co., 91 S.W.2d 297, 170 Tenn. 28.

Knowledge and acquiescence

Where mortgagee in other state knew that mortgaged automobile was being brought into Missouri, or after it was so moved acquiesced therein, and took no steps to follow automobile into Missouri, or to file or record his lien therein, and permitted the rights of innocent third persons to attach in this state, it could not recover automobile as against such innocent third persons.—Hollipeter, Shonyo & Co. v. Maxwell, 224 S.W. 113, 205 Mo.App. 357.

Removal to third state without knowledge

The fact that the mortgagee knew that the property had been removed to one state does not deprive him of the right to assert the priority of his lien in a third state to which the property has been removed without his knowledge.—Hoyt v. Zibell, Ill., 259 F. 186, 170 C.C.A. 254.

19. La.—Devant v. Pecou, 128 So. 700, 13 La.App. 594.

his part in failing to ascertain the fact of removal.²⁰ In these states, the record of a chattel mortgage in another state is not constructive notice thereof to a subsequent purchaser or attaching creditor;²¹ and an attaching creditor has been held entitled to prevail against a foreign mortgage, although he had notice of the existence of the mortgage at the time of his attachment.²²

Statutory provisions. Under the express provisions of some statutes, foreign mortgages must be filed or recorded within a reasonable or specified time after the property is brought into the state, in order to preserve the lien against creditors or purchasers.²³ Recording and filing generally see infra §§ 130-174.

Tex.—Farmer v. Evans, 233 S.W. 101, 111 Tex. 283, answering questions certified, Civ.App., 192 S.W. 342. 11 C.J. p 426 notes 14-17.

Reason for rule

"It is a hard rule to deprive him [the mortgagee] of his reservation of title or lien upon the property without any negligence on his part. Also it is a hard rule to deprive an innocent purchaser for value of the property when he has been at no fault. The difference between them is this: While it works a hardship upon the mortgagee, yet he trusts the property to the possession of the mortgagor, and thereby puts it within the power of the mortgagor to dispose of the property to one who has no notice of his claim. The mortgagee takes the risk incident to such possession, and, while he has done no wrong and may not be negligent in regard to trying to protect his rights in the property, yet he makes it possible for a third person to be defrauded if it should be held that the rights of the third person are subject to his prior claim, of which said purchaser has no knowledge or notice."—Consolidated Garage Co. v. Chambers, 231 S.W. 1072, 1073, 1074, 111 Tex. 293, affirming Chambers v. Consolidated Garage Co., Civ.App., 210 S.W. 565, citing Corpus Juris.

In Pennsylvania

(1) "The rights of a foreign mortgagee will not be upheld as to innocent purchasers and attaching creditors, although the property has been removed from its original location and brought within [Pennsylvania] without his knowledge or consent."—Commercial Banking Corp. v. Berkowitz, 159 A. 214, 216, 104 Pa. Super. 523.

(2) Mortgages generally are contrary to Pennsylvania's public policy and will not prevail against claims of bona fide purchasers or creditors, even though executed in another jurisdiction, where such instruments are recognized and given full effect. —Kaufmann & Baer v. Monroe Motor Line Transp., 187 A. 296, 124 Pa. Super. 27—11 C.J. p 426 note 16.

(3) A statute requiring surrender of certificate of title to motor vehicle on change of ownership by operation of law and judicial sale, is not applicable in action to assert lien of valid foreign mortgage on trucks against Pennsylvania attaching creditor.—Kaufmann & Baer v. Monroe Motor Line Transp., supra.

Purchase from holder of registration card

Mortgagee's averments that creditor, who attached trucks in Pennsylvania as property of New York corporation, had knowledge that debtor was New York corporation with principal place of business in New York, and that certificate of title listing mortgage had been issued in Pennsylvania, are insufficient to show notice to creditor of existence of incumbrances on trucks.—*Kaufmann & Baer v. As applying only to removal to another county by resident

A provision that a conveyance for security ceases to have effect against a creditor of the grantor without notice, if it is not recorded within three months after removal to a county other than the grantor's residence, applies only to a grantor residing in the state and removing property to a different county in the state.—Finney v. Dryden, 108 So. 13, 214 Ala. 370.

In attachment suit, wherein intervenor claimed property under mortgage, requested charges which asserted that the bringing of mortgaged property into the state where it is brought for shipment only is not within the recording statute, although property remains in state more than three months, was properly refused, there being no such exception in the statute.—Cornelius Lumber Co. v. Lawhorn-Smith & Co., 105 So. 713, 21 Ala.App. 118, certiorari dismissed Ex parte Cornelius Lumber Co., 105 So. 714, 213 Ala. 553.

Protection for limited period

(1) Under a statutory provision that, when a mortgaged chattel is moved into the state, any previous filing of the mortgage shall not operate as notice for a period longer than one hundred and twenty days after such removal, where mortgaged property is brought into and permanently located in any county, and the mortgage has been executed and recorded according to the laws of another state, the mortgagee will be protected as against creditors of mortgagor for a period of one hundred twenty days; but such registration in another state ceases to be constructive notice after the expiration of one hundred twenty days from the time the property is permanently located in such county.—Arnold v. Wittie, 227 P. 132, 99 Okl. 236.

(2) Under Code 1907 § 3394, as amended by Acts 1911 p 115, providing that, where property conditionally sold is brought into the state, the conditional sale contract, to be good as against mortgagees without notice, must be recorded in the county into which the property is brought and remains, it was held that, where a conditionally sold automobile was, on the day it was sold, brought into a county in the state and mortgaged, and the mortgage immediately recorded, and thereafter the automobile remained in that county without record of the sale contract, the question became material whether the vendor had repossessed the car within the three months' period.—McNeill v. Motor Sales Co., 94 So. 365, 208 Ala. 310.

Retention of title contract

(1) Where property sold under retention of title contract, without being attested or recorded, is brought into Georgia and mortgaged to one

III. ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS

§ 17. Parties

The capacity and assent of parties to chattel mortgages in general is considered in § 93 infra. Questions as to who may make a chattel mortgage, who must join in the making of a mortgage, and to whom a mortgage may be made, are considered in §§ 18, 19, and 20 infra, respectively.

Examine pocket parts for later cases.

§ 18. — Persons Who May Make Mortgage in General

Under a statute requiring a mortgage to be acknowledged in the district of the mortgagor's residence, a non-resident cannot execute a valid mortgage.

Where a statute requires a chattel mortgage to be acknowledged in the district in which the mortgagor resides, it has been held that a valid mortgage cannot be executed by a nonresident.²⁶

The validity of a mortgage as affected by the title and interest of the mortgagor is considered in § 23 infra, and the capacity of parties in general, in § 93 infra.

Whether a mortgage may be made by one other than the debtor is considered, in § 37 infra, in connection with the nature of the debt which a mortgage may secure.

§ 19. — Persons Who Must Join in Mortgage

Under some statutes, both husband and wife must join in a mortgage of household goods, and an attempted mortgage without the wife's joinder is void, except that her joinder in purchase-money mortgages of household goods or of exempt property is not required.

Under statutes providing in effect that a wife must join in her husband's mortgage of household goods, or that either spouse must join in such a mortgage by the other, it is held that an attempted mortgage without the joinder of the wife is void;²⁷ but where such a statute is regarded as penal all the elements of avoidance named in the statute must affirmatively appear.²⁸ Such a statute has been held a valid exercise of the police power.²⁹ who properly records his mortgage, and is given possession without notice of the contract, the contract holder cannot recover possession from the mortgagee.—Olmstead v. Carolina Portland Cement Co., 117 S. E. 255, 30 Ga.App. 126, affirmed 121 S.E. 637, 157 Ga. 669.

(2) One purchasing personal property brought into the state from another state buys it under the law permitting holder of mortgage or note retaining title to record the instrument within six months.—Burgsteiner v. Street-Overland Co., 117 S.E. 268, 30 Ga.App. 140.

Law of other state ineffective

Law of Ohio, permitting assignee for benefit of creditors to contest rights of chattel mortgagee under an unfiled mortgage to property situated in Ohio, is ineffective, where defendants have submitted themselves to jurisdiction of New York court, as contradictory law of New York governs as to remedies.—Halladay v. Worthington, 163 N.Y.S. 362, 99 Misc. 141.

What constitutes household goods

(1) The statutory terms should include property dedicated to the convenience and comfort of the home which is adequate and adapted to that purpose, having due regard to owner's means and station in life. (2) As so defined, a piano is within the terms of the statute.—Thomas v. Sandlin, supra.

(3) In at least one jurisdiction, it must appear that the goods were in use by the family as well as in their possession.—Dunham v. Cramer, 51

A. 1011, 63 N.J.Eq. 151—Green v. McCrane, 37 A. 318, 55 N.J.Eq. 436.

Such statute is "designed and calculated to maintain the peace and comfort of the home and to protect the wife and children therein from the ill-considered action of an improvident husband."—Thomas v. Sandlin, supra.

Where this requirement appeared in an "act undertaking to regulate the business of a loan broker," it was held to apply only to chattel mortgages given to such brokers, and not to those given to other persons:³⁰

Purchase-money mortgages of household goods are not subject to the requirement stated above, and are valid without the wife's joinder;³¹ and this exception has also been recognized under a statute requiring the wife's joinder in a mortgage of exempt personal property.³²

§ 20. — Persons to Whom Mortgage May Be Made

Whether or not a chattel mortgage may be made to one other than the creditor of the mortgagor is considered in § 37 infra, and whether it may be made to a person other than the one furnishing the consideration, in § 42 b (1) infra.

Examine pocket parts for later cases.

§ 21. Subject Matter

In the absence of statutes to the contrary, any personal property capable of being sold may be the subject of a mortgage, but not a mere personal privilege.

The general rule, said to be correctly stated in Corpus Juris, is that, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, any personal property which is capable of being sold may be the subject of a mortgage.³³

In addition to the particular kinds of property considered in §§ 30–36 infra, and those referred to in connection with the discussion of related matters in §§ 23–29, other items or types of personal property have been held proper subjects of chattel mortgages.³⁴

A mere personal privilege cannot be made the subject of a chattel mortgage.³⁵

(2) Where by statute a license

§ 22. — Statutory Provisions

Statutes providing generally what property may be the subject of a chattel mortgage have been variously construed as allowing the mortgage of tangible property only, or chattels only, or all personal property, or all property other than real estate. Under statutes specifying the mortgageable property, a mortgage of other property has been held void; but other authorities hold it valid as between the parties, and as against others except creditors and subsequent purchasers in good faith and for value.

Statutes providing that a chattel mortgage may be made of all personal property,³⁶ or of all kinds of personal property,³⁷ have been held to refer only to tangible property, or property which may be taken into possession. However, in at least one jurisdiction it has been held by statutory construction that all personal property may be mortgaged,³⁸ and, under a statute so providing, crops and all property, goods, or chattels not defined by statute to be real estate may be mortgaged.³⁹

A statute providing that goods and chattels may be mortgaged has been held to refer only to chattels, and not to personal property generally.⁴⁰

Where the statute specifically states what property may be subject to a chattel mortgage, there is authority that a valid mortgage cannot be given on property other than such as is described;⁴¹ but under other authority a mortgage of property not specified in the statute is, nevertheless, valid as between the parties,⁴² and as against all other persons except creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers in good faith and for value.⁴³

In addition to the statutory provisions considered here generally, statutory provisions are considered was declared to "confer a personal privilege to transact the business which may be the subject of the license," it was held not to be mortgageable in spite of the fact that it was assignable by the licensee, if assigned in compliance with certain statutory regulations.—In re Flaherty, supra.

(3) But where the statute recognizes the right to transfer the license from one person to another, and where the right is a valuable one capable of being surrendered and reduced to money, the license is more than a mere personal privilege, and has all the attributes of property except tangibility, and must be treated as property.

a. Necessity of Title or Interest

Since a mortgagor can convey only that interest in property which he possesses, a mortgage of property in which the mortgagor has no title or interest is ordinarily invalid; it may be valid if made with the true owner's consent, but is not validated, at least as against third persons, by his subsequent ratification.

A chattel mortgagor can convey by mortgage only that interest which he possesses in property.⁴⁴ Thus, with qualifications as to property not yet acquired or in existence, appearing in § 26 infra, the rule is that a mortgagor cannot give a valid mortgage on property which he does not own or in which he possesses no interest,⁴⁵ as where he exe-

It is the duty of the mortgagee,⁴⁸ or his assignee,⁴⁹ to see that the mortgagor has good title to the property which he undertakes to mortgage.

Consent of, or ratification by, owner. It has been held that a mortgage made by one lacking interest in the property is valid where it was made with the consent of the true owner;⁵⁰ thus, a mortgage, executed by a person who has no interest in time, it was held that a clause covering after-acquired property cannot be made to include personalty of which the mortgagor has neither possession nor right of possession.—Real Estate Bank & Trust Co. v. Baldwin Locomotive Works, 90 S. E. 49, 145 Ga. 831.

While, as stated in § 23 supra, a mortgagor can convey by mortgage only that interest in property which he possesses, a limited or special interest in the property mortgaged is sufficient to support a mortgage,⁵⁵ as where the mortgagor has an equitable interest in the property,⁵⁶ or owns an undivided share.⁵⁷

(2) In Particular Circumstances

A mortgagor may mortgage property which he has purchased but not paid for, which he has purchased under a contract of sale on trial, which he has agreed to sell under an executory contract of sale, which he has already made subject to an existing mortgage, which he has bought under a conditional sales contract, or, until payments are completed, which he has sold under a conditional sales contract. A mortgage of property acquired by fraud may validly be made to a bona fide mortgagee without notice of the fraud. Where, under a statute regulating the sale of motor vehicles, a sale is void, a mortgage by the purchaser is also void, as it is where he rescinds the sale.

The fact that goods purchased have not been paid for will not prevent the purchaser from executing a mortgage thereon.⁵⁸

Under a contract of sale on trial or approval, the vendee has a mortgageable interest before payment of the purchase money.⁵⁹

Executory contract of sale. A valid chattel mortgage may be made of chattels which the mortgagor is under an executory contract to sell to another when title has not yet passed;⁶⁰ but a mortgage made by the vendee under an executory contract of sale cannot affect the vendor's ownership.⁶¹

Existing mortgage. A mortgagor of personal property under an existing mortgage still has an interest in the property which he may mortgage,⁶² even though the first mortgagee is in possession.⁶³ Even after default a mortgagor in possession,⁶⁴ or, it has been held, even where the first mortgagee is in possession,⁶⁵ has a mortgageable interest in the property. The right of such mortgagor in possession continues at least until foreclosure by sale or perhaps by lapse of time,⁶⁶ and, it has been intimated, may exist even after foreclosure by sale, as where a surplus remains in the hands of the first mortgagee.⁶⁷ A second mortgage of personal property has been held a mortgage merely of an equity of redemption.⁶⁸

A valid second mortgage may be made notwithstanding a statute makes the mortgagor guilty of a crime if he sells or disposes of mortgaged property without the consent of the holder of the mortgage.⁶⁹

A contract of sale of a crop to be grown has been held merely an executory contract to sell, under a provision of the Uniform Sales Act to the effect that title to property to which something must be done in order to put the property into deliverable condition does not pass by a sale until such thing is done, so that a mortgage of the crop when growing is valid.—Dysart v. 11 C.J. p 429 note 52.

Contract of conditional sale. A buyer under a conditional sales contract, reserving title in the chattel in the seller until the purchase price is paid, has an interest in the property which he may mortgage,⁷⁰ at least if it is partially paid for,⁷¹ even without the seller's consent,⁷² and even though the contract of conditional sale prohibits the encumbering of the chattel sold.⁷³ The mortgagee's interest depends on the rights of the mortgagor under the contract,⁷⁴ and his rights become complete on performance of the condition by the mortgagor,⁷⁵ and the mortgage will be valid against attaching creditors and subsequent mortgagees whose mortgages were given after the property was paid for,⁷⁶ but such a mortgage cannot impair the rights or interests of the vendor.⁷⁷

gage,⁷⁸ and where the vendor repossesses the chattel, but the vendee tenders full payment, so that, under governing statute, title passes to the vendee, his mortgagee's lien attaches.⁷⁹

Until the purchase price is paid the conditional vendor likewise has such an interest as may be mortgaged.⁸⁰

Title acquired by fraud. A valid mortgage may be made of property the title to which was acquired by fraud, provided the mortgagee was not a party to, and had no knowledge of, the fraud, and accepted the mortgage in good faith;⁸¹ but where the mortgagee is not an innocent purchaser, the mortgage is invalid.⁸² However, it has been held in equity, without reference to notice to the mortgagee, that a chattel mortgage of after-acquired property acquired by fraud cannot be enforced.⁸³

Statute regulating sale of motor vehicles. Where, by reason of failure to comply with a statute regulating the sale of motor vehicles, a sale is void, a chattel mortgage given by the purchaser is also void;⁸⁴ and, where the sale may be rescinded by the purchaser, a mortgage made by him is unenforceable after repudiation of the sale;⁸⁵ but where the sale is not avoided by such want of compliance a mortgage given is valid⁸⁶ and suit may be maintained to foreclose it.⁸⁷

c. Presumption or Representation as to Ownership or Interest

Under some authorities, giving a chattel mortgage does not prove, or create a presumption, that the mortgagor owns the property; under others, such giving implies that he has title, and he thereby represents that he has a mortgageable interest.

Under some authorities, the mere giving of a chattel mortgage does not prove that the mortgagor owns the property mortgaged;⁸⁸ nor does it create a presumption of such ownership,⁸⁹ at least in controversies between a mortgagee and a stranger.⁹⁰ Other authorities hold that the giving of a chattel mortgage implies,⁹¹ or carries with it the inference,⁹² that title is in the mortgagor; further, that a mortgagor, by executing a mortgage of personal property, represents to the mortgagee that he has an interest subject to mortgage.⁹³

d. Effect of Loss of Interest

The right to mortgage an interest in property continues until it is lost.

The mortgagor's right to mortgage his interest in property continues until such interest is lost;⁹⁴ and if he has an interest in the property at the time the mortgage is executed, his subsequent lack of interest is immaterial.⁹⁵

§ 24. — Ownership of Land on Which Crop Is Raised in General

In some jurisdictions the validity of a mortgage of crops to be grown depends on the mortgagor's having an interest, when the mortgage is made, in the land on which they are to be grown. In others, such interest is not required at the time of making the mortgage, provided the mortgagor subsequently acquires an interest, or provided the crops, or land on which they are to be grown, are in the parties' contemplation, or that the mortgagor contemplated acquiring them. The nature of the interest required has been variously stated; it is sufficient that the mortgagor is in possession of the land or has an equitable interest therein.

In some jurisdictions a mortgage on crops to be grown in the future on land which the mortgagor does not own and in which he possesses no interest at the time of the execution of the mortgage is regarded as invalid, or as not creating a lien,⁹⁶ at

Under a statutory provision that a "mortgage of unplanted crops of agricultural products, executed on or after the first day of January of the year in which such crops are grown, conveys the legal title thereto," it was held that "where there is a potential interest in the mortgagor at the time of the giving of a mortgage, the title to such crops as are raised on the land by him or his tenants is in the mortgagee."—First Nat. Bank v. Crawford, supra.

In equity; equitable title

(2) Under the common law a mortgage executed on an unplanted crop to be grown on land in which the mortgagor had a present interest at the time of its execution vested in the mortgagee only an equitable title to the crops subsequently planted and matured by the mortgagor. Potential interest in crops

"The rule has always been, even at law, that a crop sown, but not yet grown or harvested, is the proper subject of a chattel mortgage, if the mortgagor, at the time of giving the mortgage, has the ownership or right to the continued possession of the soil, since he has then a potential interest in the crops grown."—Twin Falls Bank & Trust Co. v. Contrary view criticized

"The Supreme Court of Alabama . . . adheres to the doctrine that a chattel mortgage is invalid unless the thing covered thereby at the time of making the mortgage had at least a potential existence. . . . It seems to us that the better rule is that a mortgage may be made upon crops when the mortgagor at the time does not have an interest in the land, providing he thereafter acquires an interest. It is difficult to see in what way this would operate unjustly if the mortgage is otherwise sufficient."—Community State Bank v. Martin, supra.

Question for jury. Whether a mortgagor of crops at the time of the execution of the mortgage had the necessary interest in the land on which they are to be raised is a question for the jury.⁹

In Texas, while a mortgage made on crops to be grown in the future on land in which the mortgagor has an interest is valid,¹⁰ the existence of such an interest in the land, when the mortgage is made, is, in equity, not essential to the validity of a mortgage of a future crop,¹¹ being merely a circumstance tending to identify the crop mortgaged,¹² provided, however, at the time of the execution of the mortgage the crops,¹³ or some particular land on which they were to be grown,¹⁴ were in the contemplation of the parties, or the mortgagor contemplated acquiring the crops.¹⁵

a. Leases Generally

A tenant under a lease has a mortgageable interest in crops growing, or to be grown, on the leased land, but the landlord has not. The tenant's right to mortgage the crops depends on the continuance of the lease; and the mortgagee's interest in the crops, under the tenant's mortgage, is subject to the terms of the lease, and terminates with the termination of the lessee's rights.

A landlord has no such interest in, or title to, crops grown on rented land as can be made the subject of a valid mortgage;¹⁶ but a tenant under a lease has such an interest, and may make a valid mortgage of the crops growing, or to be grown, thereon.¹⁷ However, the right of a tenant to mortgage the crops depends on the continuance of the lease¹⁸ and the interest of the mortgagee under a mortgage given by a lessee is subject to the terms of the lease,¹⁹ and terminates with the termination of the lessee's rights.²⁰

Thus, a tenant cannot mortgage crops to be grown at a later time than that for which he has hired the premises;²¹ nor can a person who expects to rent land give a valid mortgage on crops to be raised, before the renting actually takes place.²² Further, where a lease is terminated by forfeiture upon default by the tenant,²³ or by the occurrence of events which, according to the pro-

16. Ala.—Killian v. Hall Auto Co., 149 So. 716, 25 Ala.App. 518. 11 C.J. p 431 note 83.

But, where the landlord reserved title in the crop as security for the payment of rent, it was held that, the rent not having been paid, the landlord's mortgage thereafter created a valid lien as against an attaching creditor of the lessee.—Smith v. Atkins, 18 Vt. 461. Mortgagee's interest in land on which crop is raised generally see supra § 24.

No legal title in landlord

"It is elementary that the landlord had no legal title to the crops as the title is in the tenant, and he alone can make a valid mortgage thereon."—Killian v. Hall Auto Co., 149 So. 716, 25 Ala.App. 518.

But, under an agreement whereby a bank furnished a tenant farmer with seed wheat, the resulting crop to belong to the bank unless the tenant bought the crop by executing a chattel mortgage on it to the bank, it was held that, in the absence of the tenant's exercising his option to buy the crop, he had no mortgageable interest in it, and a mortgage thereon was void.—Penalosa State Bank v. Calista Grain & Mercantile Co., 276 P. 70, 128 Kan. 132.

Actual property right

"On April 20, 1920, at the time the mortgage in this case was executed, the mortgagor was in possession of the land rented by him for the year 1920, and had most of his crops planted. He having not only a potential, but an actual property right in said crops, all of said crops constituted property subject to a valid mortgage."—Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank of Kaufman v. Howell, Tex.Civ.App., 268 S.W. 776, 778.

Lease terminable by sale

Under a mortgage of a growing crop by a tenant holding under a lease which provides that the lease may be terminated by the sale of the land by the owner, the mortgagee takes subject to such condition.—Woody v. Wagner, supra.

20. Or.—Francis Bros. v. Schallberger, 3 P.2d 530, 533, 137 Or. 529, 83 A.L.R. 108.

"It is a rule of law that upon the termination of the lessee's rights all interests of third persons acquired and held by them under the lessee are also terminated, for they can acquire no rights in the premises other or greater than the original lessee has."—Francis Bros. v. Schallberger, supra.

If the crops are growing when the lease expires, the mortgagee may have them.—Fry v. Miller, 45 Pa. 441.

11 C.J. p 431 note 86, p 432 note 87.

But under a statute, providing that all mortgages "on crops already planted, or to be planted, shall have the same force and effect to bind such crops and their products as other mortgages have to bind property already in being" it was held that "potential interest" or "potential existence" was no longer essential, so that a mortgage on a crop, to be grown after the mortgagor's term under parol agreement expired, was valid.—Smith v. LaFayette, 119 P. 979, 980, 29 Okl. 671, applying statute of Indian Territory.

Lease for indeterminate period

Where a landowner on renting in 1915 took a mortgage from the tenant on crops raised during the current year and every succeeding year on the rented premises or any place rented by the tenant, and the lease was for one year only, with an agreement to rent for succeeding years if the parties could agree upon terms, the tenant did not have such an interest in the land as to make the mortgage valid against third persons as to a crop raised in 1920; "such a contract falls far short of creating a present interest in the land covering the period of intended production."—Vinson Bros. v. Finlay, 90 So. 310, 206 Ala. 478.

22. Ala.—E. W. & J. W. Moring v. Helms, 97 So. 647, 210 Ala. 175—Sellers, etc., Co. v. Hardaway, 66 So. 460, 138 Ala. 388.

"If a tenant should mortgage such crops as might be raised or grown by him on some indefinite place which he expected to rent, the conveyance would, we apprehend, be inoperative and void, as an attempted conveyance of a mere possibility or expectancy, not coupled with any interest in, or growing out of property."—E. W. & J. W. Moring v. Helms, supra quoting Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 288.

Negotiating for lease

If this were not so it would be tantamount to granting to the tenant the power to create by voluntary or involuntary sales or liens, rights in third persons inconsistent with and beyond his own estate and would authorize the defeat of the contract rights of the lessor or owner."—Francis Bros. v. Schallberger, supra. As against subsequent lessee visions of the lease, were to terminate it,²⁴ or where the tenant honestly surrenders, or by legal proceedings loses, possession of the land,²⁵ the mortgagee's interest in the growing crop is held to be extinguished, although there is authority for the view that a voluntary surrender by the tenant does not extinguish his mortgagee's interest in the crops.²⁶

On the other hand, a tenant remaining in possession and holding over after the expiration of his lease, and before making a new one,²⁷ or a tenant under an oral lease, which, on account of the statute of frauds, could be avoided after the execution of the mortgage,²⁸ has been held to have a sufficient interest in the land to render his mortgage of crops to be grown thereon valid.

Liability of landlord or purchaser

On the termination of a lease, under a provision that it might be terminated by a sale of the land, neither the landlord nor the purchaser was held liable to the mortgagee for the value of the crop covered by the mortgage, even though at the time of the sale of the land the lessee or chattel mortgagor received payment for his work and the value of the growing crop.—Woody v. Wagner, supra.

What constitutes good faith

Where tenants, in arrears in rent, unable to raise money, and with the uncertainty attending the raising of a crop, surrendered possession of the land and accepted a contract to work for wages, it was held not to be imprudent, and therefore, apparently, to be in good faith.—J. As to them the surrender operates only as a grant subject to the rights of the mortgagee or purchaser in the property."—Francis Bros. v. Schallberger, supra.

Mortgages of unplanted crops see infra § 32 a (2).

In Texas

(1) Where the landlord was to receive a share of the tenant's crop as rent, it was held that "one cannot mortgage that which he does not own, so as to create a lien thereon prior to his becoming such owner. A landlord is not the owner of any part of a growing crop being raised by his tenant before it is divided, or, if there is an agreement to divide, before it is matured and ready to be divided."—Williams v. King, Civ. App., 206 S.W. 106, 107, citing Corpus Juris.

(2) Where the rental contract provided that the landlord's share of the crops grown was to be converted into cash and deposited to his credit, the same result was reached, and the language quoted in (1) supra was adopted.—Brod v. Guess, Civ.App., 211 S.W. 299, 301.

(3) But where, under a rental contract by which the landlord was to receive a share of tenant's crop as rent, the landlord assigned the contract as security for a debt, it was held that the crop rent "may be sold or mortgaged even though at the time of the sale or mortgage the crop has not actually been planted."—Sanger Bros. v. Hunsucker, Civ.App., 212 S.W. 514, 516, 41 S.Ct. 320, 254 U.S. 621, 65 L.Ed. 443.

The tenant or employee under a crop-sharing lease or contract may mortgage his interest before division; but authorities differ as to whether a tenant or cropper under such a lease or contract has a mortgageable interest in crops while title thereto remains in the landlord.

Where by the terms of a lease of land the landlord is to receive a portion of the crop grown by the tenant, as rent for the use of the demised premises, the landlord can mortgage his share of the crop before division,²⁹ although it would seem that, if the landlord is to receive a share of the cash proceeds from the sale of the crops, he does not have a mortgageable interest in the crops.³⁰

In Williams-King and Brod-Guess the cases appear to be those of ordinary landlord and tenant, where the landlord had no interest in any specific part of the crops to be produced. . . . While in Sanger Bros. v. Hunsucker, the relation of the parties appears to be that of crop sharing, in which the owner of course has a fixed interest in a specific part of the crops raised. In such a case he is as much the owner of his share as the tenant is owner of his share. We know of no reason why either may not execute a chattel mortgage upon his definite interest in such specific property. . . . Whether . . . [the owner] was to be paid his rentals in cotton or cash, or partly in cotton and partly in cash, the right to receive such payment in any event is property subject to . . . chattel mortgage."—Bowyer v. A tenant or employee under a crop-sharing lease or contract may mortgage his interest in the crop,³¹ even before the crop has been planted,³² and an employee who is to receive a share of the proceeds from the sale of the crop has a right to mortgage his interest therein.³³

In other jurisdictions, even though, under the terms of the lease³⁷ or contract,³⁸ or under statute,³⁹ title to the crop remains in the landowner until division, the tenant or cropper has been held to have some interest in the crops which he can mortgage. This was "to carry on the farm at halves," the contract was held not entirely clear as to whether the crops were to be divided in kind, so that it could not be said, as a matter of law, that the landlord had a mortgageable interest in the crops.—Orcutt v. Moore, supra.

Under a statute providing that a mortgage by an employee or tenant of his share in a crop is invalid unless made with the consent of the landlord or employer, it was held that, after his share has been set aside for him, the tenant or laborer may mortgage or dispose of his share as he will, independently of the landlord's consent.—Parks v. Webb, 3 S.W. 521, 48 Ark. 293.

If relationship of tenants in common exists between the parties to a farming contract, and they have an interest in the crops as such, they may mortgage their interests therein.—Smith v. Stamford Gin Co., Tex. Civ.App., 74 S.W.2d 519, error dismissed—36 C.J. p 712 note 81.

Payment of advances

Where title to the crops is to remain in the landlord until certain advances are paid, the tenant has no mortgageable interest therein until such advances are paid.—Hawkins v. Beakes, 30 N.Y.S. 91, 80 Hun 292, affirmed in 44 N.E. 1124, 150 N.Y. 562—11 C.J. p 432 note 95 [b].

Right to sell crops

Reservation to the landlord, by parol lease, of the right to sell the crops to pay for advances made by him, was held not to convey legal title, and not to prevent the tenant from mortgaging the crops.—Wilkinson v. Kettler, 69 Ala. 435.

"In numerous instances it has been decided by the courts of various American jurisdictions that an occupant of land, who holds under an instrument that gives him a specified share of the crops to be produced on the land, has an interest in the crops that is capable of being the subject of a mortgage, even though the legal title is reserved in the landowner."—Merriman v. Martin, supra.

After the crop comes into existence, the mortgage passes the interest of the tenant.—National Bank of Wheaton, Minn. v. Elkins, 159 N.W. 60, 37 S.D. 479, distinguishing *Larchwood Sav. Bank v. a. In General

Some authorities hold that a mortgage of after-acquired property is invalid, at least as against third persons, others that it is valid, at least as between the parties, and against persons claiming through the mortgagor voluntarily or with notice; and conditions have been placed upon validity, such as that the intention to mortgage the property be clear and that its acquisition be anticipated.

Whether a chattel mortgage on property subsequently to be acquired is valid is a question upon which the authorities are divided.⁴⁴ It has been said that at common law a mortgage could operate only on property actually in existence when the mortgage was given, and then actually belonging to the mortgagor;⁴⁵ but, as will appear in § 26 b infra, some authorities include the doctrine of potential existence in their statement of the common-law rule.

In the absence of, or apart from, statutes relating thereto, the effect of which is considered in § 26 f infra, many authorities hold that a mortgage of property to be subsequently acquired by the mortgagor is invalid, or does not create a lien,⁴⁶ at least

(2) "The reason of this rule at law is, that a mortgage is a conveyance of the title to the mortgagee, and title can not be conveyed where the mortgagor has none, or where the property conveyed is not in esse."—Richardson v. Washington, 31 S.W. 614, 88 Tex. 339, 344.

After-acquired crops

(1) Mortgage covering crops raised by mortgagor in a certain year is not valid as to crops acquired by mortgagor on another place subsequent to execution of mortgage.—Polytinsky v. Lindsey, 106 So. 70, 21 Ala.App. 128.

as against third persons,⁴⁷ such as subsequent purchasers⁴⁸ or creditors.⁴⁹

The common-law doctrine has been said to have been founded upon a technical rule and to have been frequently evaded or modified, as by the invention of the doctrines of "potential existence" and "intervening act," and the holding that a mortgage may be treated as an executory agreement to mortgage,⁵⁰ which are considered, respectively, in § 26 b, § 26 d, and § 26 c, infra. Some authorities have gone beyond the doctrine of potential existence and have adopted the rule applied in equity, holding that, where there is a clear intention to create a lien on property, not then owned, but to be subsequently acquired by the mortgagor, whether then in being or not, a lien will be created.⁵¹ Other authorities, without reference to the doctrine of potential existence or the equity rule, have held that a mortgage of property subsequently to be acquired, or to come into existence, is valid,⁵² at least as between the parties thereto,⁵³ and against all persons claiming

Where a receiver has been appointed for the mortgagor company, it has been held that he stands in no better position than the mortgagor, and hence as against him the mortgagee's title to the after-acquired property is good.—Perkins v. Batterson, 21 N.Y.S. 815, 66 Hun 583.

under the mortgagor voluntarily,⁵⁴ or with notice or knowledge.⁵⁵ Such a mortgage has been held valid where the mortgage provides therefor,⁵⁶ or contains "appropriate language,"⁵⁷ or the property is after-acquired in the usual and ordinary course of business,⁵⁸ or if, at the time the mortgage was executed, the acquisition of the property by the grantor was anticipated and the parties intended that it be subject to the mortgage,⁵⁹ or if definite property mortgaged, although not yet in existence, is in the contemplation of the parties,⁶⁰ and even though the mortgagor retains possession.⁶¹

Acquisition of title and giving of mortgage simultaneous. Where a mortgage is given simultaneously with the mortgagor's acquisition of the property, or in contemplation of the immediate acquisition of the property, it cannot be said to be a mortgage of after-acquired property,⁶² as, for example, where a purchase-money mortgage is given simultaneously with the taking of title and is a part of the same transaction.⁶³

b. Doctrine of Potential Existence or Interest

Under the doctrine of potential existence or interest, things may be mortgaged which, although lacking identity or separate entity, are the natural product, growth, or increase of property which has at the time a corporeal existence, and in which the mortgagor has a present interest. Things having neither actual nor potential existence cannot be mortgaged.

Although the unqualified statement has been made that property not in being cannot be mortgaged,⁶⁴ it is more commonly held that things which are the natural product, growth, or increase of property which has at the time of the making of the mortgage a corporeal existence, and in which the mortgagor has a present interest, may be the subject of a valid mortgage, the mortgagor being regarded as having a potential interest in such things, and they as having a potential existence.⁶⁵ Where the thing

The mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy is not a party within the meaning of this rule.—In re Hurley, D.C.Mass., 185 F. 851.

As common-law pawn

If a mortgage of after-acquired chattels is not authorized by statute it is valid as a contract for a common-law pawn, and good between the parties, and the debtor is estopped from denying the creditor's rights to apply such property according to the agreement.—Commonwealth Trust Co. v. Salem Light, etc., Co., 89 A. 452, 77 N.H. 146.

But it has been held that a sale of personal property will confer title good as against a mortgage purporting to cover the same, but executed before the mortgagor had title thereto, even though the purchaser had knowledge of the existence of the mortgage at the time of making the purchase.—Netzorg v. National Supply Co., 28 Ohio Cir.Ct. 112.

Agreement for mortgage

A stipulation in a mortgage of a farm, that the mortgagee should have a lien on all wood cut, and should have delivered to him such mortgages as should be necessary to protect his lien, while not in itself constituting a mortgage, was a valid agreement for a mortgage which might be enforced against the mortgagor and all persons claiming through him with notice of the lien, including an execution creditor of the mortgagor.—Wood v. Lester, 29 Barb., N.Y., 145.

"Prospective existence"

"The general rule is that in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary any personal property . . . which has an actual or prospective existence may be mortgaged."—Equitable Life Ins. Co. of Iowa v. Brown, 262 N.W. 124, 127, 220 Iowa 585.

At law as well as in equity

(1) "There has been a tendency to be mortgaged meets these requirements, it is not necessary that it have identity or separate entity.⁶⁶ Things which have neither an actual nor a potential existence are not the subject of mortgage.⁶⁷

The doctrine of potential existence or interest has been said to be an exception to the rule that a mortgage of property to be acquired is void as against subsequent purchasers and attaching creditors,⁶⁸ and to have been invented by the courts to evade the common-law rule that a mortgage could operate only on property then actually in existence and owned by the mortgagor,⁶⁹ although some authorities include in their statement of the common-law rule the doctrine of potential interest as applied to property in existence and in which the mortgagor has a potential interest.⁷⁰

Future accounts. A mortgage of future accounts has been held valid;⁷¹ but other authority is to the contrary, on the ground that property not in being cannot be mortgaged.⁷²

Future earnings. Mortgages of future earnings have been recognized as valid,⁷³ but, by some authorities, only where the earnings are referable to an existing contract.⁷⁴

c. Mortgage as Executory Agreement to Mortgage

A mortgage of property to be acquired has been construed as an executory agreement for a mortgage, authorizing the contractee to take possession of the property when acquired by the contractor, provided he does so before third persons acquire rights.

In some cases it is held that a mortgage of property to be acquired in the future will be construed as an executory agreement for a mortgage,⁷⁵ which in all states recognizing a chattel mortgage as a mere lien, to extend the law of mortgages so as to recognize as valid, for all purposes, both in law and equity, mortgages which formerly were upheld in equity only. And the courts of many states recognize the validity at law of a mortgage given upon property not then owned by the mortgagor, but which is in existence, and also recognize mortgages upon property not in existence where the mortgagor is the owner of the source from which this property must come."—Iverson v. Soo El. Co., 119 N.W. 1006, 22 S.D. 638, 643.

(2) Although it has been contended that this rule is applicable only in equity, "many authorities tend to the conclusion that this result occurs at law, and not merely in equity."—Parsons v. American Agr. Chemical Co., 182 N.E. 863, 864, 280 Mass. 424.

Mere belief, hope, or expectation on the part of the mortgagor that he will in the future acquire an interest in the property to be mortgaged is not sufficient to bring the property within the scope of this rule.

authorizes the contractee to take possession of the property as soon as it is acquired by the contractor, provided he does so before third persons acquire rights.⁷⁶ The adoption of this doctrine has been said to be one of the methods by which the common-law rule that a mortgage could operate only on property actually in existence at the time of giving it, and then belonging to the mortgagor, was evaded or modified.⁷⁷

d. Ratification or New Act after Acquisition of Property

A mortgage of future property may become effective when a new act intervenes after the mortgagor acquires the property, as where he surrenders possession to the mortgagee; and it has been held sufficient that the mortgagee takes possession under a provision in the mortgage empowering him to do so. It has also been held, without reference to the provisions of the mortgage, that the mortgagee's taking possession, or starting an equity proceeding to subject the property to the mortgage, will make it effective.

The doctrine of "intervening act" is said to have been invented by the courts as one of the means for relaxing the vigor of the common-law rule that one could not mortgage property which was not in existence or which he did not own.⁷⁸ Thus, a mortgage of future property may become effective on the intervention of some new act, after the mortgagor has acquired the property,⁷⁹ such as an act by him in furtherance of the original grant, showing an intention to have the property pass thereby,⁸⁰ as, for example, where he surrenders possession of the after-acquired property to the mortgagee;⁸¹ and the general rule is that an actual transfer of possession to the mortgagee, either by voluntary delivery by the mortgagor or by the exercise of a power to take possession contained in the mortgage, constitutes an effectuation of the mortgage.⁸² It has fur-

As against creditors

It is, of course, settled that the New York rule is that a mortgage of after-acquired personal property is ineffective as against creditors of the mortgagor, and in order to make it an effective lien as against creditors some further act is necessary.—Cunningham v. Sizer Steel Corporation, D.C.N.Y., 1 F.2d 337, applying New York law—Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Brooklyn Rapid Transit Co., D.C.N.Y., 291 F. 863, applying New York law—Pintch Compressing Co. v. Buffalo Gas Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 230 F. 830, applying New York law.

Actual change of possession must take place, so that where the mortgagor delivers the goods to the mortgagee who immediately returns them, the mortgagor continuing to retain possession and control, no title will have passed as against attaching creditors.—Griffith v. Douglass, 73 Me. 532, 40 Am.R. 395.

Effect of mortgage provision authorizing taking of possession

(1) By a development of this doctrine, it is held that a provision in a mortgage authorizing the mortgagee to take possession of the mortgaged property is a continuing agreement, and that the taking of possession of after-acquired property, by virtue of the previous consent of the mortgagor given in the mortgage, is equivalent to a delivery of possession by the mortgagor, and the mortgagee's lien is thereby made good without any new act or consent on the part of the mortgagor.—Burrill v. Whitcomb, 61 A. 678, 100 Me. 286, 109 Am.S.R. 498, 1 L.R.A., N.S.,

451, distinguishing Griffith v. Douglass, 73 Me. 532, 40 Am.R. 395, on the ground that, in that case, the mortgagee's possession was only instantaneous, and was immediately resumed by the mortgagor, and disapproving Head v. Goodwin, 37 Me. 181—11 C.J. p 438 note 45.

(2) "A stipulation in the mortgage authorizing the mortgagee to take possession at any time, is not a mere license revocable at the pleasure of the mortgagor, but a valid and binding contract which continues in force until performed."—Burrill v. Whitcomb, 61 A. 678, 681, 100 Me. 286, 109 Am.S.R. 498, 1 L.R.A., N.S., 451—11 C.J. p 438 note 45 [a].

(3) It has been held, however, that the license granted by the mortgagor to the mortgagee to take possession of the property is revocable.—Chynoweth v. Tenney, 10 Wis. 397—11 C.J. p 440 note 49.

(4) Under other authority, where the power is coupled with an interest, as, for example, where it covers existing property, the license is irrevocable.—McCaffrey v. Woodlin, 65 N.Y. 459, 22 Am.R. 644.

On breach of condition

Mortgagee's possession of property on breach of condition validates mortgage as to after-acquired property, if mortgage so provides.—Southern Surety Co. v. People's State Bank of Astoria, 163 N.E. 659, 332 Ill. 362, reversing 243 Ill.App. 195.

ther, been held, without reference to the provisions of the mortgage, that the mortgage will become effective on the mortgagee's taking possession of the property,⁸³ or on his commencing a proceeding in equity to subject the specific property to the lien and to enforce the lien,⁸⁴ and that a mortgagee who takes possession before the rights of third persons intervene,⁸⁵ or before a petition in bankruptcy is filed,⁸⁶ has valid title to the property.

It follows that the mortgagee's failure to take possession of the after-acquired property before the rights of an innocent third party attach renders a provision covering such property void as against such a party;⁸⁷ and where the mortgagor receives a discharge in bankruptcy, or makes an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, before possession is taken by the mortgagee, the opportunity for completing the lien is gone.⁸⁸

e. Rule in Equity

In equity, while there is some authority to the contrary, a mortgage of future property is commonly held to be valid, or to create a lien which equity will enforce, except as against purchasers for value without notice, or except where creditors' rights intervene, no further act being necessary in most jurisdictions. The mortgage operates as a contract to grant a lien, on the acquisition, or the coming into existence, of the property, which contract will, in most jurisdictions, be enforced as a lien on the property.

While a contrary rule prevails in some jurisdictions,⁸⁹ according to the weight of authority a mortgage of property not yet acquired, or not yet existing, at the time of the execution of the mortgage, even where it would be held invalid in law, is valid in equity, or creates a lien which equity will enforce,⁹⁰ when an intention that the mortgage shall cover such property clearly appears from the face of the instrument,⁹¹ at least as between the parties or against the mortgagor,⁹² and against all persons

(2) "It is only when the rights of third parties will not be prejudiced that equity, treating as done that which was agreed to be done, will turn a contract to give a mortgage on property to be acquired into an equitable mortgage on such property as fast as it is acquired, and enforce the same accordingly against the mortgagor, his representatives and assigns. In other words, the agreement and intention of the parties to a mortgage upon property not yet in existence will be given effect by a court of equity so far as practicable, provided no interest is affected except that of the mortgagor and mortgagee, who entered into the stipulation, but equity closes its doors and refuses relief if the interests of creditors are involved."

f. Statutory Provisions Generally

Under a statutory provision that an agreement may be made to create a lien on future property, mortgages of such property are held valid; under a provision permitting mortgages of growing crops and all personalty, property having a potential existence may be mortgaged.

In some jurisdictions, under statutory provisions to the effect that an agreement may be made to create a lien on property not yet acquired or not yet in existence, mortgages on such property have been held valid,² at least as between the par-

General provision as to property mortgageable

(1) A section of the California code that property "not capable of manual delivery" may not be mortgaged "relates only to the kind of property which may be mortgaged," and does not prevent mortgages of after-acquired property under another section of the code.—In re Los Angeles Mfg. Co., D.C.Cal., 7 F.Supp. 567, 568.

(2) Under provisions that "any interest in personal property which is capable of being transferred may be mortgaged," and that "an agreement may be made to create a lien upon property not yet acquired by the party agreeing to give the lien, or not yet in existence," it was held that "as to 'property not yet acquired by the party agreeing to give the lien,' the necessary implication is that it must be such property capable of delivery, and such as may be taken possession of by the mortgagee upon its acquisition by the mortgagor."—Security State Bank of Havre v. Mariette, 223 P. 114, 115, 69 Mont. 536.

After-acquired cattle

Mortgage on cattle, including cattle added to the herd by purchase, is valid under such a statute.—Stockyards Loan Co. v. Nichols, Okl., 243 F. 511, 156 C.C.A. 209, 1 A.L.R. 547, applying Oklahoma statute.

In Louisiana, under a statute making a contract of sale "valid be-ties;³ and a provision to the effect that mortgages may be made on growing crops and any and all kinds of personalty, with some exceptions, was held to permit the mortgaging of property having a potential existence at the time of the creation of the mortgage.⁴ A statute sanctioning mortgages of after-acquired property and property not in existence applies to personal, as well as real, property, in the absence of language restricting its application to real property.⁵

Statutes governing mortgages of renewals of, or additions to, stock or equipment are considered in the following subdivision of this section.

Future earnings. Under statutes declaring what property may be mortgaged, without reference to future property, mortgages of future earnings have been held valid.⁶

tween the parties even though the property has not been delivered," and a statute making a mortgage on after-acquired property valid "if the debtor should ever acquire the ownership of the property," it was held that, where a mortgagor, having ordered property from the mortgagee, was to receive the property after the making and recording of a mortgage thereon, the mortgagor "was the owner of the property in so far as concerned the . . . [mortgagee] and itself, as soon as its order was accepted, therefore the subsequent mortgage was valid between the parties as soon as it was executed."—Remington-Rand v. Profits Island Gravel Co., La.App., 144 So. 636, 637, opinion reinstated 150 So. 76.

In Mississippi

(1) Under a statutory provision by which it was "intended to make valid deeds of trust or mortgages on chattels (not including merchandise) in which the grantor has no present or potential interest," and providing that a mortgage or deed of trust made on property "owned at the time of the execution of the instrument and on such property of like kind as may be acquired during a stated period not to exceed twelve months . . . shall be a valid lien against all creditors of the grantor," and that "the grantor shall have the right to pay the indebtedness thus secured with interest at any time, though not then due," it was held that, "being in derogation of the common law, the statute is to be strictly construed," so that mortgages covering lumber stacked in yards and all that might thereafter be stacked were not valid, not being property "to be acquired by the mortgagor during a stated period not to exceed twelve months."—Coffeeville Bank v. Stone, 121 So. 816, 817, 153 Miss. 811, denying suggestion of error 118 So. 413, 151 Miss. 482.

(2) Under such statute, it was held that a deed of trust may be given upon after-acquired chattel, acquired within twelve months thereafter.—Tabb v. People's Bank & Trust Co., 133 So. 137, 139, 160 Miss. 22.

(3) But a later statute, identical with the one appearing in (1) above except that the clause stating the purpose of the act was omitted, was held not to limit mortgages to property acquired within twelve months; the statute "does not grant the right to execute mortgages on after-acquired property, but provides only (1) when such mortgages shall be valid as to creditors, and (2) that the mortgagors may pay the secured debts before the maturity thereof."—*Prentiss Mercantile Co. v. Mortgages of future earnings gener-

g. Renewals of, or Additions to, Stock or Equipment

While in some jurisdictions a mortgage of after-acquired property in renewal of, or in addition to, stock or equipment on hand, or purchased with the proceeds of the sale thereof, is valid, in others it is void. Such a mortgage is generally held valid between the parties, and may be valid as against third persons, at least where the additions become part of the stock, or possession is taken by the mortgagee, before their rights have intervened. Such mortgages have been held valid under governing statutes.

Apart from statutory provisions, hereinafter referred to, in some jurisdictions a chattel mortgage of after-acquired property which is in renewal of, in substitution for, or in addition to, stock or equipment on hand when the mortgage was executed, or which is purchased with the proceeds of the sale of such goods, is valid,⁷ if the intention to cover such property is clearly expressed in the mortgage, so as to charge with notice persons dealing with the stock,⁸ while in others such a mortgage is void and ineffectual.⁹ Such mortgages are generally held valid between the parties.¹⁰ They have also been held valid as against third persons,¹¹ except subsequent purchasers and creditors acquiring specific liens,¹² at least where the additions become part of the general stock,¹³ or the mortgagee takes possession,¹⁴ before the rights of the third persons have intervened; however, in at least one jurisdiction, where mortgages of after-acquired property are held void, the taking of possession by the mortgagee, even before the rights of third persons intervene, does not change the rule.¹⁵

Statutes. Mortgages of after-acquired property in substitution for, or in addition to, stock or equipment on hand have been held valid within the terms of governing statutes.¹⁶

§ 27. — Possession of Mortgagor

Property not in the mortgagor's actual possession may be mortgaged, if held by one not claiming title, or whose claim is subordinate to the acknowledged owner's right; and property taken from his possession by legal process may be mortgaged.

It is not essential to the validity of a chattel mortgage that the property be in the actual possession of the mortgagor;¹⁷ it is sufficient that it be held by a third person who does not claim title,¹⁸ or whose claim is subordinate to, and by virtue of, the general property and right of the acknowledged owner.¹⁹

Property in custodia legis. Even though the possession of the property has been taken from the mortgagor under process of law pending determination of the ownership thereof,²⁰ or on execution,²¹ the interest remaining in the mortgagor is sufficient to support a mortgage, the mortgagee taking subject to the lien, if any, created by the levy of process.²²

§ 28. — Property Subsequently Severed from the Realty

Growing trees, grass, and shrubs may be conveyed by chattel mortgage, the mortgage working a severance from the realty; but this is not true of articles which are part of the soil.

Growing trees,²³ grass,²⁴ and shrubs,²⁵ although regarded as part of the realty, see the C.J.S. title Property § 7, also 50 C.J. p 753 notes 31-34, have nevertheless been held subject to conveyance by a

§ 29. — Realty and Personality in Same Mortgage

An instrument mortgaging both realty and personality may be a valid chattel mortgage as to the personality.

An instrument mortgaging both real and personal property may be a valid chattel mortgage as to the personal property included,²⁸ such as rents, issues, use, and profits of land, and crops raised thereon,²⁹ or at least creates a sufficient lien, as between the parties, on the property described.³⁰

§ 30. — Animals

Despite authority opposed, it is settled that the unborn offspring of domestic animals may be mortgaged along with, or separately from, the females giving them birth, at least if the mortgagor has a present interest in the parent animals. The mortgagee, although having title as against the mortgagor, must take possession of the increase before the nurture period passes to have valid title against third persons.

It has been said that a mortgage of the increase of animals is an exception to the rule that mortgages of after-acquired property are void;³¹ so, although there is authority to the contrary,³² it is well settled that the unborn offspring of domestic animals may properly be mortgaged along with,³³ or even separately from,³⁴ the females which give them birth, at least if such increase is expressly included in the terms of the mortgage,³⁵ and if the mortgagor has a present interest in the animals whose future increase is being mortgaged.³⁶

Doctrine of potential existence

(1) In criticizing Battle Creek Valley Bank v. Madison First Nat. Bank, 88 N.W. 145, 62 Neb. 825, 56 L.R.A. 124, it was declared that the court in that case overlooked one of the qualifications of the rule as to after-acquired property, and that "the increase of cattle would seem logically" to be property "potentially belonging to . . . [the mortgagor] as an incident of other property then in existence and belonging to him."—Hagan v. Cowan, 278 P. 68, 70, 35 Ariz. 334.

"Familiar rule of law"

That things not in esse at the time a contract, including a chattel mortgage, is made cannot be the subject thereof is the rule within limits, "but there has also been a familiar rule of law in this state for fifty years that a chattel mortgage covering

§ 31. — Choses in Action

Except where particular statutory provisions are construed otherwise, a chose in action is commonly held mortgageable.

In the absence of statutory restrictions, a chose in action is commonly held a proper subject of a chattel mortgage,⁴⁰ as in the case of book accounts,⁴¹ another chattel mortgage,⁴² a fund in court to be paid to heirs,⁴³ an interest under an executory contract,⁴⁴ a life insurance policy,⁴⁵ a note,⁴⁶ and shares of stock.⁴⁷ However, in some jurisdictions, under the construction of particular statutory provisions,⁴⁸ or without reference to statutes,⁴⁹ the contrary rule obtains.

(1) Crops Already Planted or Growing

A growing crop is a proper subject of a chattel mortgage even where regarded as part of the realty; and a part of a crop may be mortgaged. A crop is a growing one, in some jurisdictions, when the seed is planted, while other authority requires that it be up.

It has been said to be universally recognized⁵⁰ that a growing crop is a proper subject of a chattel mortgage.⁵¹ This rule has prevailed even where the crop was regarded as part of the realty.⁵² A part of a crop may be mortgaged provided it be sufficiently described.⁵³

The requirement, in some jurisdictions, that the mortgagor have some interest in the land on which the crop is to be raised, at the time of the execution of the mortgage, is considered in § 24 supra.

What constitutes growing crop. A crop has been held to be a growing one, within the rule that a mortgage may be made on a growing crop, from the time when the seed is placed in the ground,⁵⁴ but in at least one jurisdiction a mortgage cannot be given on a crop before it is up or presents the appearance of a growing crop.⁵⁵

(2) Unplanted Crops

At law, apart from controlling statutes, it is the general rule that a mortgage of unplanted crops is valid, in some instances on the theory that the crop has a potential existence; but some jurisdictions hold such mortgages void as being on property not in existence. In equity, such a mortgage is held valid between the parties and against persons other than bona fide purchasers or incumbrancers without notice. Authorities differ on whether a new act, such as the mortgagee's taking possession after the planting, is necessary.

At law, it is the general rule, said to be followed in most jurisdictions,⁵⁶ that a mortgage of crops to be grown in the future from seeds not yet sown is regarded as valid,⁵⁷ covering the crops upon

Reason for rule

"When must a planted crop be treated as a growing crop? If we were to enter upon the inquiry, what time is necessary for the germination of planted seed, we should encounter difficulties the shrewdest sagacity can not foreknow. Attending conditions enter materially into this inquiry. The many species of seeds employed in agriculture, have different periods for germination. The seasons—heat and moisture, or their absence—are factors in the solution of this problem. We think the only reasonable solution is, to hold that the crop must be treated as growing, from the time the seed is deposited in the ground."—Wilkinson v. Ketler, supra.

Mortgage as revocable license

Rule that crop cannot be mortgaged before it is in existence is not in conflict with statute providing that parties may effect a present sale of future goods, since neither mortgagee nor buyer of future goods has a right to specific performance, the buyer being confined to an action for breach of contract, while clause in chattel mortgage covering after-acquired property is a mere license, revocable at will of mortgagor, uncoupled with any interest.—Kohler Improvement Co. v. (2) Sufficiency of description of crops not yet planted see infra § 67.

Effect of subsequent events

Validity of crop mortgage for current and succeeding years is not, in the absence of other circumstances, affected by mortgagee's refusal to finance mortgagor in succeeding year, and "the mortgages being valid when executed, they remain so, unaffected by subsequent events and develop-their being planted⁵⁸ or when they come into existence,⁵⁹ on the theory that the crop has a potential existence sufficient to give the mortgage validity;⁶⁰ in some jurisdictions, however, such a mortgage is held invalid at law as being a mortgage on property not in existence.⁶¹

A chattel mortgage upon an unplanted crop, which is afterward planted and grown, may be enforced as between the original parties, where no rights of third persons are thereby affected.—Beall v. Spear, 189 P. 938, 106 Kan. 690.

As to third parties

"In a very few jurisdictions it seems to be the law that mortgages of crops not yet planted are void as to third parties. The vast majority of the cases, however, is opposed to this view."—First Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 297 S.W. 724, 725, 221 Mo. App. 31.

(2) In interpreting the same statutes it has also been held in a Texas case that "the plain implication was that unplanted crops remained not subject to mortgage."—American Trust & Savings Bank v. Cotton Finance & Trading Corporation, Tex. Civ.App., 10 S.W.2d 186.

(2) At common law a mortgage of a crop not planted at the date of giving mortgage was invalid. "The reason . . . was because a mortgage under the common law was treated as a conveyance that had the effect of changing the title of property from the mortgagor to the mortgagee; it was a sale of the property to the mortgagee with a defeasance clause. Since a sale or transfer of property not in esse could have nothing to operate on, a mortgage of it was considered and treated as ineffectual to pass title, and therefore void."—First Nat. Bank v. Yuma Nat. Bank, 245 P. 277, 30 Ariz. 188.

As equitable mortgage

(1) "If, after giving such a mortgage [on crops to be grown], the mortgagor goes ahead and plants the crops contemplated and intended to be mortgaged, and thereby gives it potential existence, we believe the courts generally hold the instrument from that time to be an equitable mortgage, and good not only as to the parties, but also as to purchasers and incumbrancers with notice."—First Nat. Bank v. Yuma Nat. Bank, 245 P. 277, 278, 30 Ariz. 188.

(2) "The crops . . . had what is termed a 'potential existence,' and a mortgage of them, though not good as a conveyance or a reservation, was valid as an executory agreement. . . . Such an agreement is enforceable in equity, and hence is called an 'equitable mortgage.'"—Kelley v. Goodwin, 50 A. 711, 712, 95 Me. 538.

Under lien theory

"If under the common law, where the mortgagee took legal title, his mortgage upon an unplanted crop, although invalid when given, becomes valid in equity upon the planting of crop and binding upon the parties and all persons having notice, the same result must follow in those jurisdictions holding the mortgagee's interest limited to a lien," and a mortgage given before crop was planted becomes operative immediately on planting crop.—First Nat. Bank v. Yuma Nat. Bank, 245 P. 277, 30 Ariz. 188.

Validity as against particular persons

(1) Subsequent mortgagee with notice.—Morrison & Pardue v. Roberts-Dearborne Hardware Co., 14 P. 2d 738, 36 N.M. 332.

(2) Mortgagor's administrator.—Parsons v. American Agr. Chemical Co., 182 N.E. 863, 280 Mass. 424.

(3) Mortgagor's assignee.—Cheatham v. Tennell, Ky., 186 S.W. 128.

63. Kan.—Danville State Bank v. May, 271 P. 302, 126 Kan. 714.

Neb.—First Nat. Bank v. Young, 247 N.W. 586, 124 Neb. 598.

64. In Alabama

(1) Under a statutory provision to the effect that a mortgage of unplanted crops executed during the year in which the crops are grown conveys the legal title thereto, such a mortgage conveys legal title to the crop from the moment of execution.—First Nat. Bank v. Crawford, 149 So. 228, 227 Ala. 188, denying certiorari 149 So. 230, 25 Ala.App. 463—11 C.J. p 443 note 72 [a] (1).

(2) Thus a mortgage on 1931 crops, executed in January and payable in March, was not void on ground mortgage became due before 1931 crops could be raised and gathered.—First Nat. Bank v. Crawford, supra.

(3) It has also been held under this provision that a mortgage of unplanted crops, executed after January 1 of year in which crops are to be grown, conveys legal title thereto only when "crops" have potential existence.—First Nat. Bank v. Crawford, supra.

(4) Under such provision, or without reference thereto, a mortgage of crops to be grown in subsequent years is held not to pass the legal title to such crops, but merely an equitable right or lien.—White v. Kinney, 101 So. 426, 211 Ala. 624—Butler Cotton Oil Co. v. Collins, 75 So. 975, 200 Ala. 217—W. B. Smith & Sons v. Gay, 106 So. 214, 21 Ala. App. 130—Sansom v. Covington County Bank, 87 So. 406, 17 Ala.App. 556, certiorari denied Ex parte Sansom, 87 So. 408, 205 Ala. 54—11 C.J. p 443 note 72 [a] (2).

(5) And a mortgage on crops grown during one year, and thereafter until indebtedness secured was paid, conveyed title to crops for that year and created lien on crops for subsequent years.—Whaley v. Bright, 66 So. 644, 189 Ala. 134—W. B. Smith & Sons v. Gay, supra.

(6) The mortgage or lien has been held valid as against third persons with notice thereof.—Houston Nat. Bank of Dothan v. J. T. Edmonson & Co., 75 So. 568, 200 Ala. 120—Kilgore v. Jones, 73 So. 832, 15 Ala.App. 472.

(7) Thus a court of equity will protect and enforce the lien of a chattel mortgage on crops to be planted as against any subsequent purchaser with notice.—Houston Nat. Bank of Dothan v. J. T. Edmonson & Co., supra.

(8) And the contract rights of a daughter in crops raised on land rented by her father, of which crops she became a tenant in common, were held subordinate to the father's crop mortgage if the daughter had notice of the mortgage at the time of contracting.—Kilgore v. Jones, supra.

(9) When a crop to be grown comes into existence, and is delivered to the mortgagee, his legal title has been held to be complete.—Houston Nat. Bank of Dothan v. J. T. Edmonson & Co., supra.

(10) Construing an amendment to the above provision which provided that "mortgages of crops to be grown in the year subsequent to the year in which the debt secured by the mortgage matures, and all contracts to execute such mortgage shall be null and void," it was held that "the purpose and effect of the . . . [amendment] was to deny the power to such mortgagors to incumber their crops, by equitable lien or title, except as to crops grown on land which the mortgagor owned or had a present interest in when the mortgage was given, during the year or years in which the debt secured by the mortgage, by its terms, matured."—Shaw v. Kinney, 149 So. 227, 227 Ala. 170.

(11) Thus, where mortgage on crops was executed by landowner in December, 1930, securing debt maturing in 1931, mortgage vested in mortgagee equitable title to 1931 crops.—Shaw v. Kinney, supra.

(12) Prior to the statute, a mortgage on an unplanted crop did not convey legal title, but created an equitable title and interest.—Whitleshoffer v. Strauss, 3 So. 524, 83 Ala. 517—11 C.J. p 443 note 72 [a] (4).

In Arkansas

(1) Under statutory provisions to the effect that mortgages on planted and unplanted crops shall be as effective as mortgages on property in being, and that such mortgages are valid as to crops grown within twelve months from the execution of the mortgage, mortgages of unplanted mortgagor have some interest in the land on which the crop is to be raised, at the time of the execution of the mortgage, is considered in § 24 supra. Intervention of new act. Some authorities reed crops are held valid.—Delta Cotton Co. v. Arkansas Cotton Oil Co., 97 S.W. 440, 80 Ark. 431—11 C.J. p 443 note 72 [b] (1).

(2) It will not be presumed that the parties contracted for crops to be grown after such time.—Word v. Cole, 183 S.W. 757, 122 Ark. 457.

(3) Prior to the statute, mortgages on unplanted crops were void.—Roberts v. Jacks, 31 Ark. 597, 25 Am.R. 584—Tomlinson v. Greenfield, 31 Ark. 557—Hamlett v. Tallman, 30 Ark. 505.

In Dakota Territory, under a statutory provision to the effect that an agreement may be made to create a lien on property not yet acquired or existing, a mortgage of crops not yet planted was held valid.—Grand Forks Nat. Bank v. Minnesota, etc., El. Co., 43 N.W. 806, 6 Dak. 357—11 C.J. p 443 note 72 [c].

In Georgia

(1) Under a statutory provision that "a mortgage given to secure advances for the purpose of making and gathering crops, shall embrace and cover crops before the same are planted or growing of such mortgagor, when it is so stipulated therein, within the limit of the calendar year such crops may be planted," a crop mortgage executed on December 20 for making a crop to be grown during the following year is valid, since the advances, not the mortgage, must be given during the calendar year.—J. S. Cowart & Son v. Talliaferro, 163 S.E. 271, 272, 45 Ga. App. 93.

(2) Not only must the mortgage stipulate that it was given to secure such advances, but the advances must actually be given for that purpose.—Dawson Nat. Bank v. Bank of Dawson, 155 S.E. 791, 42 Ga.App. 300.

(3) Without reference to the statute, it has been held that a mortgage of unplanted crops is invalid unless given in consideration of advances made for the cultivation of the crops.—First Joint Stock Land Bank v. Moultrie Banking Co., 176 S.E. 791, 49 Ga.App. 759.

(4) Prior to the statute referred to in (1) supra, a mortgage of an unplanted crop was invalid.—Cusseta Bank v. Ellaville Guano Co., 85 S.E. 119, 143 Ga. 312.

(5) However, a lien under a statute providing for a special lien for fertilizers was held not subject to the rule that mortgages of unplanted crops are invalid.—Hardwick v. Burtz, 59 Ga. 773.

In Idaho

(1) Under a statutory provision to the effect that a chattel mortgage may be made upon crops to be grown and sown in the future, such mortgages have been held valid.—Collins v. Brown, 114 P. 671, 19 Idaho 360.

(2) So apart from statute.—Twin Falls Bank & Trust Co. v. Weinberg, 257 P. 31, 44 Idaho 332.

(3) A chattel mortgage executed in January, 1890, upon the crop of wheat that might be sown and grown during that year was held a valid lien on the crop under the governing statutes.—Pierce v. Langdon, 28 P. 401, 3 Idaho 141.

In Minnesota

(1) Under a statutory provision to the effect that mortgages of unplanted crops, more than one year before the seed is sown, are void, unless the mortgage is given to secure the purchase price of the land on which the crops may be planted, a mortgage not satisfying the statutory conditions is void.—Ward v. Rippe, 100 N.W. 386, 93 Minn. 36.

(2) Under this statute a mortgage executed August 15 of crops to be grown for the next year is good.—Piano Mfg. Co. v. Halberg, 63 N.W. 1114, 61 Minn. 528.

(3) Subject to the limitations imposed by this statute, and before its enactment, chattel mortgages on crops not yet planted have been sustained.—Hogan v. Atlantic El. Co., 69 N.W. 1, 66 Minn. 344—11 C.J. p 443 note 72 [e] (3).

In Mississippi

(1) It has been held, under a statute so providing, that a mortgage can be made on crops to be produced within fifteen months after the execution of the mortgage.—Betts v. Ratliff, 50 Miss. 561.

(2) But mortgages of crops to be produced have been held valid independently of such statute.—White v. Thomas, 52 Miss. 49—11 C.J. p 443 note 72 [d].

(3) Without reference to statute, a mortgage has been held valid only if it is on crops of a certain year to secure advances made during that year to produce such crops; and if a mortgage of unplanted crops covers the crops of subsequent years, it constitutes, as to such crops, an equitable mortgage enforceable only between the parties.—Butler Mercantile Co. v. Cruise, 166 So. 325, 175 Miss. 200.

(4) It has also been held that "a mortgage or deed of trust may be given, good at law, upon a crop to be produced during the year in which the deed of trust or mortgage is executed, and this may be before the crop of that particular year is planted, and may be given even before the beginning of the year, if so closely connected both in point of time and in purpose that it may be said that preparations were then being made for the planting and production of the particular next succeeding annual crop."—Coffey v. Land, 167 So. 49, 51.

In North Carolina

(1) Under, or without reference to, a statute providing that a lien may be had, by one advancing money for the cultivation of crops, on the crops made within one year from the date of the agreement for the lien, a chattel mortgage on crops to be grown during the following year is held valid.—Warrington v. Hardison, 116 S.E. 166, 185 N.C. 76—Hurley v. Ray, 76 S.E. 234, 160 N.C. 376—11 C.J. p 443 note 72 [f] (1).

(2) If the conveyance is silent as to how long the mortgage is intended to continue, it is valid only as to the crops raised during the year next after its execution.—Smith v. Coor, 10 S.E. 466, 104 N.C. 139—Wooten v. Hill, 3 S.E. 846, 98 N.C. 48.

In North Dakota, under statutory provisions to the effect that an agreement may be made to create a lien on property not yet acquired or existing, and that such a lien by contract shall attach only to the crop next maturing after the delivery of such contract, a mortgage of unplanted crops next maturing after the execution and delivery of the mortgage is valid.—Thompson Yards v. Richardson, 199 N.W. 863, 51 N. D. 241—11 C.J. p 443 note 72 [g].

In Oklahoma

(1) A mortgage of unplanted crops has been held valid under a statute providing in effect that a mortgage of planted or unplanted crops shall have the same force and effect to bind the crops as other mortgages have to bind property in being.—Smith v. La Fayette, 119 P. 979, 29 Okl. 671.

(2) Such a mortgage is also valid under an apparently different statute to the effect that an agreement may be made to create a lien on property not yet acquired or existing.—Allis Chalmers Mfg. Co. v. Security Elevator Co., 38 P.2d 138, 140 Kan. 580, applying Oklahoma statute.—Eckles v. Ray, 75 P. 286, 13 Okl. 541.

In South Dakota, under a statute providing, among other things, that an agreement may be made to create a lien on property not yet acquired or not in existence, a tenant's interest in crops to be grown under a crop-sharing lease is mortgageable.—National Bank of Wheaton, Minn. v. Elkins, 159 N.W. 60, 37 S.D. 479.

In Washington, under statutory provisions to that effect, a mortgage made on a crop before it is planted, is valid as to crops grown within gard a mortgage as ineffective to convey the legal title to unplanted crops,⁶⁵ or to create a lien thereon,⁶⁶ until the intervention of some new act, such as the mortgagee's taking possession,⁶⁷ actual or constructive,⁶⁸ of the crop after it has been planted, and before the rights of third parties become fixed;⁶⁹ but there is also authority for the view that such a mortgage is valid without any new act.⁷⁰

b. Fruit Crops

A fruit crop is held a proper subject of a chattel mortgage, whether regarded as realty or as personalty. Under governing statutes, a mortgage of a growing fruit crop has been held mortgageable, but mortgages of fruit crops to be grown have been variously held valid and invalid.

In the absence of statute, a fruit crop, whether regarded as a perennial crop and part of the realty,⁷¹ or as the same as an annual crop, and, therefore, personalty,⁷² is held to be a proper subject of a chattel mortgage.

Where mortgages of fruit crops are held to be authorized only by a statute authorizing the mortgaging of growing crops, a growing fruit crop may be the proper subject of a chattel mortgage.⁷³ Under such construction, chattel mortgages of fruit crops not yet growing are held void;⁷⁴ but under a stat-twelve months from the execution thereof.—Community State Bank v. Martin, 258 P. 498, 144 Wash. 483.

65. Ala.—Hurst v. Bell, 72 Ala. 336. Mo.—Langford v. Fanning, App., 7 S.W.2d 726.

Requirement of new act as to mortgages of after-acquired property generally see supra § 26 d.

Ohio.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Shelly Seed Corporation of Holgate, 189 N.E. 654, 46 Ohio App. 548.

The rule is well established in this state that a chattel mortgage on an unplanted crop is ineffectual to create a lien, either legal or equitable, in favor of the mortgagee until the intervening of some new act, as where the mortgagee takes possession of the property after being planted.—Nelson v. State, 238 N.W. 110, 112, 121 Neb. 658—State Bank of Gering v. Grover, 193 N.W. 765, 766, 110 Neb. 421.

70. Mass.—Parsons v. American Agr. Chemical Co., 182 N.E. 863, 280 Mass. 424.

Neither delivery nor possession

A recorded mortgage of a future crop is valid as against the mortgagor's administrator notwithstanding the mortgagee never received delivery nor took possession of the crop.—Parsons v. American Agr. Chemical Co., supra.

71. Ga.—A. J. Evans Marketing Agency v. Federated Growers'

Credit Corporation, 165 S.E. 114, 118, 175 Ga. 294.

Analogy to turpentine crop

(1) "A peach crop is very similar . . . to a crop of turpentine. The turpentine, until separated from the tree, is a part of the realty. After such separation it is personalty. . . . No one can doubt that turpentine in pine trees may be sold or incumbered before the trees are even cut."—A. J. Evans Marketing Agency v. Federated Growers' Credit Corporation, supra.

(2) Property subsequently severed from realty see supra § 28.

Foreclosure after crop gathered

After peaches are gathered, mortgage liens against peach crop may be foreclosed as on personalty.—A. J. Evans Marketing Agency v. Federated Growers' Credit Corporation, supra.

72. Cal.—Congdon v. G. M. H. Wagner & Sons, 278 P. 863, 865, 207 Cal. 373.

Idaho.—Twin Falls Bank & Trust Co. v. Weinberg, 257 P. 31, 33, 44 Idaho 332, 54 A.L.R. 1527.

"A growing crop of fruit occupied the same relation to the land as a growing crop of grain, and as fructus industriales was personal property which might properly be subjected to a chattel mortgage."—Congdon v. G. M. H. Wagner & Sons, supra.

"That an apple crop is personal property, and would be subject to chattel mortgage in the absence of statute, is, no doubt, the modern rule."—Twin Falls Bank & Trust Co. v. Weinberg, supra.

What constitutes "growing" fruit crop

(1) A fruit crop "is not a growing crop within the meaning of our chattel mortgage statute at any time prior to the preceding dormant winter period."—Stuhlmiller v. Stuhlmiller, 248 P. 393, 394, 140 Wash. 175.

(2) As applied to a fruit crop, the words "growing crops" must be held to relate only to crops grown and harvested the year the chattel mortgage is given.—Kennewick Supply & Storage Co. v. Hembree, 233 P. 660, 133 Wash. 697, affirmed 236 P. 808, 133 Wash. 341—Kennewick Supply & Storage Co. v. Fry, 233 P. 658, 133 Wash. 341, affirmed 236 P. 808, 133 Wash. 341.

(3) "It cannot be held that the commencement of the formation of the 'fruit buds' in a given year constitutes a portion of the period of the growing of the crop of the succeeding year any more than it can be held that the growth of the tree in other respects during the prior years of its life constitutes a part of the period of the growing of the crop of succeeding years."—Stuhlmiller v. Stuhlmiller, supra—Kennewick Supply & Storage Co. v. Hembree, 233 P. 660, 133 Wash. 697, affirmed 236 P. 808, 133 Wash. 341—Kennewick Supply & Storage Co. v. Fry, 233 P. 658, 133 Wash. 341, affirmed 236 P. 808, 133 Wash. 341.

Fruit crop not grown from seed sown or planted

Under a statute permitting mortgages "upon growing crops and upon crops before the seed thereof shall have been sown or planted," with the provision as to crops grown from seed sown or planted that the mortgaging for more than a year in advance is forbidden, it was held that a crop of fruit was not a crop grown from "seed that are sown or planted" and that, therefore, only a ute permitting chattel mortgages of crops to be "sown and grown," a chattel mortgage of fruit crops not yet grown is valid.⁷⁵

§ 33. — Fixtures

Chattels incorporated with the land as fixtures will not pass by chattel mortgage, but attached chattels remaining personalty may be so encumbered; thus a building may be the subject of a chattel mortgage if movable by agreement with the landowner. A chattel mortgagee may not remove a chattel or building, or foreclose on a building, if his mortgagor does not obtain, or has lost, the right of removal.

Where chattels have been so incorporated with the land as to assume the character of fixtures, they will not pass under a chattel mortgage;⁷⁶ but if their character as personalty is retained, they may be so encumbered, although attached to the realty.⁷⁷ Thus, although ordinarily, a building on land is not regarded as the proper subject of a chattel mortgage,⁷⁸ yet, if a building is erected by one person on the land of another, under an agreement with the owner of the land that it may be moved, it remains personalty, and may be the subject of a chattel mortgage,⁷⁹ as where it is erected by a lessee under such agreement,⁸⁰ although prima facie a part of the freehold.⁸¹

Mortgagor's lack of right of removal. As is stated in § 23 a supra, a mortgagor can convey by mortgage only that interest in property which he possesses; thus, if the mortgagor is a tenant of the realty to which a chattel is annexed,⁸² or on which a building is erected,⁸³ and does not obtain, or has lost, the right to remove the property, his mortgagee does not have that right; nor can the mortgagee of a building which became the property of the landowner, and which the tenant could neither remove or sell, foreclose his mortgage thereon.⁸⁴

Under a statute providing that any interest in real property capable of being transferred may be mortgaged, it has been held that personal property which, through being attached to land, has become a part of the realty may still be mortgaged separately from the land itself;⁸⁵ and under a statute

"growing" fruit crop could be mortgaged.—Stuhlmiller v. Stuhlmiller, 248 P. 393, 140 Wash. 175—Kennewick Supply & Storage Co. v. Hem-bree, 233 P. 660, 133 Wash. 697, affirmed 236 P. 808, 133 Wash. 341—Kennewick Supply & Storage Co. v. Fry, 233 P. 658, 133 Wash. 341, affirmed 236 P. 808, 133 Wash. 341.

Vendee of land

Where a vendee, under a contract for the sale of land, purchased his building material for use in constructing a granary under an agreement with the seller of such building material that the building to be constructed therefrom should be deemed personalty, and the building is constructed in such manner that it can be removed from the realty without material injury thereto, a chattel mortgage given on such building is enforceable, the building not being real property and the vendee being deemed the owner in equity; and the mortgage is not rendered invalid by a provision in the contract of sale to the effect that all buildings erected or placed thereon shall not be removed therefrom, but shall be and remain the absolute property of vendor until the contract has been fully performed by vendee. — *Thompson Yards v. But it has been held that a building erected by lessees on land of which they held a lease for a definite term, which lease provided that the lessees were to have the right to remove the building on the termination of the lease, became real property, and did not pass by a chattel mortgage, since "whenever the owner of a building has any estate in the land, the title to the building attaches to that estate, and is as much real estate as that in the land is."—In re Rogers & Woodward, D.C. Materialman

Where a building erected by a tenant became part of the realty, a chattel mortgage on the building, given to the materialman who furnished part of the lumber therefor, conveyed no right of removal to the mortgagee, for the tenant did not have that right.—*Compton v. granting the right to mortgage "movables," a mortgage of fixtures, or "movables immobilized by destination," was held valid.⁸⁶

§ 34. — Household Goods

Under a statute specifying that upholstery, furniture, and household goods may be mortgaged, such property is mortgageable without qualification or limitation.

Under a statute specifying that, among other things, "upholstery, furniture, and household goods" may be mortgaged, the right to mortgage such property is without qualification or limitation.⁸⁷

The requirement that the mortgagor's spouse join in a mortgage of household goods is considered in § 19 supra.

§ 35. — Stock in Trade

Apart from statute, a mortgage of a stock in trade has been held valid, at least as between the parties, but void as against purchasers and creditors of the mortgagor; the validity of such a mortgage may, however, be and is in some jurisdictions controlled by express statutes.

In the absence of statutory restrictions, while a mortgage of a stock in trade has been held valid,⁸⁸ at least as between the parties,⁸⁹ such a mortgage is void as against purchasers and creditors of the mortgagor.⁹⁰ The effect on the validity of an agreement that the mortgagor may continue to sell the merchandise without accounting to the mortgagee for the proceeds of the sales is considered in §§ 202-207 infra.

Under a statute providing in effect that a mortgage of a stock of goods exposed to sale in the regular course of business, which the mortgagor is to continue to possess, control, and sell, is void, such a mortgage is void as against innocent third parties,⁹¹ but has been held valid as between the parties.⁹²

Under a statute specifying what property may be the subject of a mortgage, and making no reference to stock in trade, personalty held for sale,⁹³ or in transit, to be placed on sale when received,⁹⁴ was held mortgageable; and under a statute expressly permitting the mortgaging of stock in trade, a bill of sale of such stock, given as security for the payment of a debt, is valid.⁹⁵

"From . . . 1825, until the present time, it has been uniformly held by this court that such a mortgage . . . on a stock of goods, wares, and merchandise . . . is 'null and void as against creditors and purchasers' of the grantor. . . . Property bought for the express purpose of daily indiscriminate sale to the general public, exposed for such sale at the place of business of a licensed dealer, and over which the dealer is permitted to exercise the dominion of owner, cannot be made the subject of a valid chattel mortgage." — Boice v. Finance & Guaranty Corporation, supra.

§ 36. — Chattels Real

A chattel real is not mortgageable by chattel mortgage.

A chattel real is not the proper subject of a chattel mortgage.⁹⁶

§ 37. Debt or Liability Secured

A debt or liability which it is given to secure is an essential of a mortgage; as between the parties at least it may be due to or from others than the mortgagee or mortgagor and a single mortgage may secure several debts to several persons.

In order that a transaction may constitute a chattel mortgage it is essential that there be a debt or liability,⁹⁷ the nature of which is considered below in this section and in §§ 38-41 infra, and that a transfer of property be made to secure such debt or liability.⁹⁸

A chattel mortgage may be given to secure a debt of any kind,⁹⁹ as, for example, an unliquidated debt,¹ nor need the debt have had its inception in, or be evidenced by, a note;² but a mortgage given to secure a note cannot exist as an independent security.³

Parties' relationship to debt. It has been declared that where there is no relationship of debtor and creditor, a chattel mortgage is ordinarily held fraudulent and void as to third persons, although as between parties it may be valid.⁴ A mortgage may be given to one person to secure a debt owed by the mortgagor to another,⁵ as where it is given to a

Cancellation of debt

Where plaintiff conveyed cotton-ginning plant to trustee under agreement that corporation should be formed and stock issued to his creditors in cancellation of the debts, with the option to him of purchasing the stock by paying the creditors, the transaction did not constitute a mortgage, since the debts were canceled and not continued.—Trott v. Flato, Tex.Civ.App., 244 S.W. 1085.

Making of payment

"A feature essential to a mortgage is an indebtedness which it is designed to secure. The existence of this is not implied in a provision that a bill of sale shall be void if the grantors shall 'pay' a certain sum of money by a certain day. Payment of money does not necessarily imply a previous binding obligation to pay, but may be made as the recompense or equivalent for some present benefit, the procurement of which is optional with the payer."—*Holmberg v. Meaning of "unliquidated debt"

"An 'unliquidated debt,' however, within the meaning of that expression as it is used in the sense that its payment is capable of being secured by a mortgage, is a debt which, while not actually existing when the contract of hypothecation is made, is, from the nature of the contract and the whole subject-matter thereof, inherently capable of coming into existence. It simply means a debt the exact amount of which cannot be known at the time that the mortgage is given."—Hayashi v. Pacific Fruit Exchange, supra.

But, where a creditor took a note from a debtor who was a member of a partnership, sold it to a bank with his indorsement, and when the note fell due took a new note signed by both partners, payable to him, which he used in taking up the first note, transferring it to the same bank, and taking a chattel mortgage to secure himself, it was held that the mortgage was not defective because the bank was the owner of the note at the time it was given, the creditor being at all times liable thereon.—Farmers' & Merchants' State Sav. Bank of Manchester v. Kriegel, 195 N.W. 624, 196 Iowa 833.

But it has been held that "an essential feature of a mortgage . . . is, that the title or possession is trustee for the creditor,⁶ although in some jurisdictions such a mortgage is regarded as fraudulent and void as to third persons.⁷ It has also been held that a mortgage may be made by one person to secure a loan made to another.⁸ A chattel mortgage may be made to cover separate debts owing to different persons.⁹

Statutory limitation on term of credit. Under a statute requiring a renewal affidavit to be filed at the expiration of a prescribed period of time after record of a mortgage, it has been held that a mortgage is not rendered invalid because the mortgage provides for a term of credit longer than the period prescribed.¹⁰

§ 38. — Future Advances

A mortgage given to secure future advances or indebtedness, or future and existing debts, is valid, in the absence of fraud.

A mortgage given to secure future advances or indebtedness,¹¹ or to secure a future debt together with an existing debt,¹² is valid, in the absence of fraud or bad faith.¹³ Such mortgages have been held enforceable to the extent of the amount due at the time when adverse rights attach to the property,¹⁴ or when the mortgagee exercises his right to take possession.¹⁵

Where a statute provides that the parties to a chattel mortgage must make oath that the debt is a just debt, honestly due and owing from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, it is obvious that a valid mortgage cannot be made to secure a debt to be thereafter contracted.¹⁶

§ 39. — Performance of Contract or Other Obligation

A mortgage may be given to secure performance of a contract, duty, or obligation which can be reduced to a money value.

In general, a mortgage may be given to secure the faithful performance of a contract duty, or obligation resting on the mortgagor, if such contract, duty, or obligation is capable of being reduced to a money value;¹⁷ and it has been held competent for parties to make a chattel mortgage to secure the payment of damages which may be occasioned by the breach of a contract,¹⁸ although there is authority to the contrary effect.¹⁹

§ 40. — Indemnity Mortgages

A mortgage may be given to indemnify another against a future and contingent liability; so given, it is valid against an attaching creditor even though the liability becomes absolute after attachment.

A mortgage may be given for the purpose of indemnifying another against a future and contingent liability,²⁰ as, for example, to secure the mortgagor's indorsee,²¹ surety,²² or cosurety.²³

Such a mortgage is valid as against an attaching creditor even though the contingent liability does not become absolute until after the attachment;²⁴ nor is such a mortgage, made to a number of mortgagees jointly, rendered invalid by the fact that no two of the mortgagees are liable on the same paper.²⁵

§ 41. — Fees and Costs

A provision allowing attorney's fees to be added to the mortgage debt has been held not to avoid the mortgage, and to be enforceable; but some authorities hold such stipulations void, at least if a fixed sum, or fixed percentage of the amount due, is stipulated. The mortgagee must actually have employed an attorney to act for him, and the reasonable value of the services will determine the fee.

Under some authorities, a provision allowing attorney's fees charged against the mortgagee to be added to the mortgage debt does not avoid a chattel mortgage,²⁶ and may be enforced in the usual manner,²⁷ even though the foreclosure has been enjoined;²⁸ by other authorities, a stipulation for the allowance of attorney's fees in case of foreclosure is held void without qualification.²⁹ In at least one jurisdiction, while a stipulation for the allowance of a fixed sum, or a fixed percentage of the amount due, is void, a stipulation for the allowance of such a fee as the court may adjudge reasonable will be held valid.³⁰

A provision in a note, secured by a mortgage, for payment of an attorney's fee has been held to create a lien on the mortgaged property for the services rendered, not exceeding the amount agreed upon.³¹

Necessity for actual expenditure. An attorney's fee cannot be added to the mortgage debt unless the mortgagee has in fact employed an attorney³² to act with respect to the foreclosure of the mortgage within the terms of the stipulation.³³

Amount of fee. If there is doubt as to the mode of computing counsel fees, the mode most favorable to the debtor must be adopted.³⁴ Only the reasonable value of the services rendered may be considered in determining the fee to be allowed,³⁵ and, under a statute so providing, the court, in a foreclosure action, will disregard a stipulation in the mortgage, and will determine the attorney's fee on the basis of reasonable compensation.³⁶ The failure of a legitimate effort to get hold of the property does not affect the validity of the charge.³⁷

A statute limiting the amount to be allowed as attorney's fees applicable to actions pending in court has been held inapplicable to foreclosures on notice and sale.³⁸

An agreement by an attorney to withdraw his claim as a preferred claimant in so far as it affects the rights of a certain creditor does not affect the validity of the mortgage as to other creditors thereby secured.³⁹

§ 42. Consideration

- a. Necessity
- b. Sufficiency
- c. Evidence

a. Necessity

A chattel mortgage is invalid and unenforceable in the absence, or upon failure, of consideration.

A chattel mortgage to be valid and enforceable must be supported by a consideration;⁴⁰ thus, in the absence,⁴¹ or upon the failure,⁴² of consider-

"The law is settled that there must be a consideration for a mortgage as contradistinguished from the debt."—Jenkins v. First Nat. Bank, supra.

Equitable mortgage

(1) An equitable mortgage has been required to be supported by a valuable consideration as well as created by an express agreement.—Cotten v. Blocker, 6 Fla. 1.

(2) However, an agreement under which legal title to property was obtained on trust to liquidate a debt has been held not to require consideration, the trust established being in the nature of an equitable mortgage.—Knowlton v. Fourth-Atlantic Nat. Bank, 171 N.E. 721, 271 Mass. 343.

Effect of absence of consideration

(1) It has been held that, where a mortgage is without consideration, the mortgagee has no right to possession of the property.—McGhee v. Tobias First Nat. Bank, 58 N.W. 537, 40 Neb. 92.

(2) Nor can the mortgagee foreclose the mortgage.—Krag-Reynolds Co. v. Oder, 52 N.E. 458, 21 Ind.App. 333.

Cancellation of mortgage

Mortgagor has been held entitled to cancellation of note and chattel mortgage on equipment in building purchased from prior loan by same mortgagee amply secured, apparently, as was claimed, because they were without consideration.—Domboorian v. Woodruff, 214 N.W. 113, 239 Mich. 1.

Note founded on void contract

A mortgage securing a note founded upon a contract which was void because of noncompliance with the statute of frauds, is unenforceable, since, consideration for the note having failed, it failed for the mortgage as well.—Baird v. Elliott, supra.

Breach of guaranty

Where machine is sold with guaranty to perform intended work, and notes are given secured by chattel mortgage on machine and other property, "an utter failure of it to do the work for which it was knowingly sold by the vendor was a total failure of consideration," and extinguished the mortgage. — Emerson-ation, chattel mortgages have been held invalid or unenforceable.

Mortgage part of general agreement. An agreement to execute a mortgage, made as part of a general agreement, is supported by the consideration which supports the agreement as an entirety, and needs no independent consideration.⁴³

b. Sufficiency

- (1) By whom furnished; for whose benefit
- (2) Assuming or releasing obligation
- (3) Forbearance of legal right
- (4) Preëxisting indebtedness
- (5) Future advances
- (6) Other consideration

(1) By Whom Furnished; for Whose Benefit

The consideration may move from one other than the mortgagee, and benefit one other than the mortgagor.

The consideration for a chattel mortgage may move from a person other than the mortgagee,⁴⁴ and may benefit one other than the mortgagor.⁴⁵

(2) Assuming or Releasing Obligation

That the mortgagee becomes a surety or guarantor, or releases one who was a surety, or assumes the primary liability, on an obligation of the mortgagor, is sufficient consideration for a mortgage. A surety's liability may constitute consideration for a second mortgage securing him.

It constitutes a valid consideration to support a chattel mortgage that the mortgagee becomes a surety or guarantor on an obligation of the mortgagor⁴⁶ or releases one who was formerly surety for the payment of an obligation;⁴⁷ and with even greater reason the assumption of primary liability for the debt or obligation of another will afford a valid consideration,⁴⁸ although the assumed obligation has not been discharged.⁴⁹

A third person's guaranty of payment of an obligation owed by the mortgagee to the mortgagor has been held sufficient consideration for a mortgage so made.⁵⁰

Liability already secured. Where a surety already secured by a mortgage of indemnity takes another, the liability for the debt constitutes a sufficient consideration for each mortgage.⁵¹

(3) Forbearance of Legal Right

The forbearance of a legal right, as by granting an extension of time to discharge a debt, constitutes consideration.

The forbearance of a legal right may constitute sufficient consideration for a chattel mortgage;⁵² so a mortgage given in consideration of an agreement to forego a right of foreclosure of a realty mortgage,⁵³ or not to sue on an overdue note,⁵⁴ has been held valid.

Extension of time. The granting of an extension of time for the payment or discharge of a debt,⁵⁵ which constitutes a forbearance of a legal right,⁵⁶ or of time for the performance of a conditional contract of sale,⁵⁷ furnishes a sufficient consideration to support a chattel mortgage.

(4) Preexisting Indebtedness

While there is authority to the contrary, a preexisting debt is generally held sufficient consideration for a chattel mortgage, at least as between the parties. Under statutes so providing, the value of the debt must not be disproportionately smaller than the value of the mortgage.

While there is authority to the contrary,⁵⁸ a preexisting debt is generally held to be a sufficient consideration for a chattel mortgage given to secure it,⁵⁹ at least as between the parties;⁶⁰ and such a mortgage is not per se fraudulent as to creditors.⁶¹

Whether such a mortgagee stands in the position of a bona fide purchaser is considered in § 309 infra.

A valid chattel mortgage may be given to secure an indebtedness contracted under an arrangement that a chattel mortgage to secure the same shall be thereafter executed.⁶²

Under statute. A mortgage securing a preexisting debt has been held valid under a statute providing that an antecedent debt is valid consideration for an obligation securing it provided the amount of the debt is not disproportionately small as compared with the amount of the obligation.⁶³

Consideration for note secured. A mortgage securing a note has been held valid where the note, given in consideration of a preexisting debt, was held valid.⁶⁴

Under Negotiable Instruments Law

An antecedent debt being held sufficient consideration for a note securing it, under a section of the Negotiable Instruments Law so providing, a mortgage securing the note was also held valid.—Cinema Schools v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., supra.

Debt reduced to judgment

That the antecedent debt "has been reduced to judgment, does not lessen the sufficiency of the debt as a consideration" for a note given, not

(5) Future Advances

Failure to make future advances in consideration of which a mortgage was given has been held to render the mortgage a nullity or to prevent a lien from attaching to the property.

Where a mortgage is given in consideration of advances to be made in the future, the failure to make such advances has been held to render the instrument, a nullity,⁶⁵ or to prevent any lien from attaching to the property described therein;⁶⁶ but where some of the advances agreed on were made, and in addition the mortgage secured a past-due debt,⁶⁷ or where the mortgagee had already taken possession of the mortgaged property and had sold it in foreclosure proceedings,⁶⁸ it was held that the mortgagor could maintain an action for damages resulting from the breach of the agreement to make advances, unless he had waived that right.⁶⁹

(6) Other Consideration

Other considerations than those already specifically considered have been held sufficient or insufficient under rules applicable to contracts generally.

In addition to the classes of consideration considered in preceding subdivisions of this section, various considerations have been held sufficient⁷⁰ or insufficient⁷¹ to support chattel mortgages.

c. Evidence

The rebuttable presumption is that a chattel mortgage was given for a consideration. In particular circumstances, the admissibility and sufficiency of the evidence as to consideration is governed by general rules.

It has been said to be a universally recognized principle⁷² that a chattel mortgage implies, or is presumed to have been given for, a consideration,⁷³

Statement confirming mortgage

A statement, in cancellation and surrender of lease, ratifying and confirming mortgage and acknowledging its validity based on original consideration, did not constitute sufficient consideration for it when other consideration had failed.—Shinn v. Cohen, 132 A. 81, 99 N.J.Eq. 418.

Use of instrument, with mortgagee's consent, where such consent was in fact unnecessary, was not consideration for a mortgage.—Baker v. Bockelman, 225 N.W. 411, 208 Iowa 254.

Other considerations see 11 C.J. p 450 note 48.

Prima facie evidence

"The mere introduction of a chattel mortgage in evidence constitutes prima facie evidence that it was given by the mortgagor for a consideration moving to the mortgagor."—Von Schleinitz v. North Hotel Co., supra.

Mortgage securing note

A chattel mortgage is prima facie executed for a good consideration when it is given to secure a note because the note itself imports a valuable and sufficient consideration.—Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 53.

Mortgage for future advances

As between the immediate parties, a chattel mortgage containing a recital that it is given for future ad-

at least where it is in writing⁷⁴ or under seal;⁷⁵ however, this presumption is not conclusive and may be rebutted.⁷⁶

In an action to foreclose a mortgage, the mortgagor has been held to have the burden of proving that there was no consideration for the mortgage.⁷⁷

Where a chattel mortgage is executed as collateral security for a balance due on a prior mortgage, the prior mortgage is competent evidence to show the consideration for the subsequent mortgage.⁷⁸

The presumption that a chattel mortgage is given for valid consideration is not dispelled by testimony of vague and uncertain meaning.⁷⁹

Particular acts or circumstances have been held sufficient to show the presence of consideration,⁸⁰ or sufficient⁸¹ or insufficient⁸² to show the lack of consideration.

§ 43. Conditions

Various conditions or stipulations governing performance or other phases of chattel mortgages have been held valid; but a vague and indefinite provision is invalid.

Conditions or stipulations which, as contained in, or annexed to, chattel mortgages, have been held valid and effective include provisions that performance is to be in a certain manner,⁸³ that the vances in a specified sum is prima facie executed for a good consideration.—Dyer v. State, 7 So. 267, 88 Ala. 225.

Recital in mortgage sufficient

In a controversy between parties to the mortgage or their representatives, involving simply the title to the property, it is not necessary to show a consideration beyond the recital in the mortgage.—Webb v. Mann, 3 Mich. 139—11 C.J. p 450 note 44.

Corporate seal

In a proceeding by mortgagees to determine whether they had a lien on the proceeds of the sale of chattels on which they had a mortgage executed by a corporation under its seal, it was held error to hold that the conveyance was without consideration.—In re Pilot Radio & Tube Corporation, C.C.A.Mass., 72 F.2d 316, affirming, D.C., 5 F.Supp. 453, certiorari denied *Eckhardt v. Mortgage to protect property from debt

(1) Where chattel mortgage was given as device to protect mortgagor's property from a debt, and mortgagee orally agreed to sell property for mortgagor, want of consideration could be shown.—Hartman v. Gann's Adm'r, 10 S.W.2d 1115, 226 Ky. 367.

(2) Whether mortgage was given for protection of mortgagor, and was without consideration, was for jury.—Hartman v. Gann's Adm'r, supra.

Giving of note by the mortgagor and its acceptance by the mortgagee was held to be evidence to show that mortgagee granted extension of time for payment of debt which constituted valuable consideration for mortgage.—D. V. Brooks Co. v. Kinney-Shotts Inv. Co., Tex. Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 1062, affirmed Kinney-Shotts Inv. Co. v. D. V. Brooks Co., 94 S.W.2d 132, 127 Tex. 307.

81. Action of foreclosure

In an action by the assignee of two mortgages to foreclose them, evidence that the mortgagee was secretary of the mortgagor corporation and as such secretary signed the note and second mortgage, that the note was in arrears when assigned, and that the mortgagor was insolvent when the action was started, had closed down its business, and was about to have its property levied on, was held to warrant a finding of no consideration for note and mortgage.—Coconut Grove Exchange Bank v. Fleming Novelty Works, 144 So. 337, 107 Fla. 1.

82. Agreement to give mortgage

Where a loan was made on an agreement that a chattel mortgage should be given, evidence that no money was received at the immediate time of the execution of the mortgage, that there was no extension or renewal of an obligation, or waiver of anything of value, that the bonds to secure which the mortgage was given had been previously issued and the money derived therefrom used, and that the mortgagor executed the mortgage simply because the mortgagee's agent had requested him to, was held insufficient to sustain a defense of lack of consideration.—Missouri Valley Trust Co. v. Whitelaw Inv. Co., 66 P.2d 374, 145 Kan. 629.

Existence of indebtedness

Where the facts showed "the actual existence of the indebtedness for which the mortgage was given," and there was "no evidence of insolvency of . . . [the mortgagor], nor of any fact which would interfere with his right to give or the right of . . . [the mortgagee] to receive the chattel mortgage which was executed to secure that indebtedness," a finding of lack of consideration was not sustained.—Smart v. Sosey, 193 P. 167, 46 Cal. App. 332.

Selling mortgaged property as built

A mortgage on computing scales, then in process of building, would not be void, as between the parties because it provided that mortgagor might sell the scales as they were completed, and pay twenty-five dol-

mortgage is not to become operative until the happening of a certain contingency,⁸⁴ that the maturity date is to be accelerated on the happening of certain events,⁸⁵ that the mortgagee shall have no remedy by sale of the property until he has paid the debt,⁸⁶ and that the mortgagor is to replenish the mortgaged stock of goods, and keep it at a certain percentage of the indebtedness;⁸⁷ but a vague and indefinite provision is invalid.⁸⁸

§ 44. — Insurance of Property

A condition that a mortgagor in possession shall insure the property for the mortgagee is valid; but, unless so provided, failure to insure does not cause forfeiture of possession.

A condition in a mortgage that a mortgagor left in possession shall insure goods for the mortgagee's benefit will be given effect.⁸⁹ However, in the absence of an express provision in the mortgage, the failure to insure does not constitute a default so that the mortgagor forfeits his right to possession,⁹⁰ especially where the mortgage also provides that, on failure of the mortgagor to insure, the mortgagee might do so and add the premiums to the mortgage debt.⁹¹ The failure to insure will be excused if it is caused by the action of the mortgagee's agent;⁹² but the procuring of insurance by the mortgagee does not satisfy a stipulation that the mortgagor shall insure so as to cure the breach on his part.⁹³

§ 45. — Stipulation against Second Mortgage

A provision that no second mortgage shall be given without written consent, which is neither asked nor given, cannot be asserted by the mortgagor or claimants under him against a second mortgage.

A provision of a chattel mortgage that no second mortgage shall be given without written consent, which is neither asked nor given, cannot be asserted by the mortgagor or those claiming under him as against a second mortgage given in violation thereof.⁹⁴

IV. FORM AND CONTENTS

§ 46. General Statement

The discussion of the formal requisites and contents of a chattel mortgage contained in the following sections, §§ 47–76, must of necessity be considered in connection with the discussion of the essential elements of such a mortgage, supra §§ 17–45, and the rules of construction which are discussed infra §§ 104–129, more particularly with reference to the parties whose debts or liabilities are secured, §§ 107–115, and as to the property conveyed, §§ 116–129.

§ 47. Form of Instrument in General

Unless the contrary is provided by statute, no particular form of words is necessary to create a chattel mortgage, and any language showing an intention to create a lien as security or indicating a transfer of property coupled with an intention that such transfer is for security will be sufficient.

The rule is well settled that, unless the contrary is provided by statute, no particular form of words is necessary to the creation of a mortgage;⁹⁵ any language is sufficient which indicates an intention to create a lien on chattels to secure a debt⁹⁶ or which indicates a transfer of such property, coupled with the intention of the parties that such transfer is for security,⁹⁷ but the creation of a lien must be clearly indicated.⁹⁸ So it has been held that a mortgage is created by reserving a lien in an instrument,⁹⁹ or by creating a charge against the property in the nature of a mortgage.¹

Use of wrong form. The mere fact that the parties use a wrong blank form in making the mortgage, and that it contains certain recitals that are not true and not erased, will not change the nature of the transaction² or render the mortgage void for uncertainty,³ although it may have such effect where the instrument is so contradictory that it does not show that the parties intended that it should be a mortgage.⁴

Where the statute expressly so provides, no particular form is essential to the creation of a mortgage as between the parties,⁵ but, where the statute provides a form, it must be substantially followed in order to render the mortgage valid as to creditors and purchasers.⁶

§ 48. Equitable Mortgage

In general, any agreement entered into for the purpose of pledging property or some interest therein as security for a debt, informal and insufficient as a common-law mortgage, will, provided the essential features of a mortgage are present, be enforced in equity as an equitable mortgage where it appears to be intended as a mere security for a debt.

As a general rule, any agreement entered into by the parties for the purpose of pledging the property or some interest therein as security for a debt, which is informal and insufficient as a common-law mortgage, will nevertheless be enforced in equity as an equitable mortgage, where it appears that it was intended by the parties as a mere security for a debt;⁷ but, unless the essential features of a mortgage are present, such as the existence of a debt due, or to become due, or some contingent liability for which the instrument is intended as a security, it cannot be sustained as an equitable mortgage.⁸ In application of these rules it has been held that an equitable mortgage is created by an agreement founded on a valuable consideration to give a mortgage,⁹ by depositing property as security,¹⁰ by the reservation of a lien for purchase money,¹¹ by authorizing one advancing money to hold a lien on property,¹² by giving an irrevocable power of attorney to collect rents,¹³ by giving an absolute bill

§ 49. Necessity for Writing

Subject to limitations imposed by the statutes of frauds and other and express statutory provisions, an oral chattel mortgage is ordinarily valid as between the parties and against those having actual notice of its existence, provided it otherwise contains the elements of a chattel mortgage.

Subject to the limitations, if any, imposed by the statutes of frauds and by other express statutory provisions, a mortgage, although not in writing; is ordinarily held to be valid as between the parties,¹⁶

A farm lease, clearly expressing the lessee's intention to give the lessor a lien on chattels belonging to, and in the possession of, the former for the payment of rent creates an equitable mortgage.—Dorman v. Crooks State Bank, supra.

Assignment of defective mortgage

By the assignment of a mortgage invalid for want of parties, the assignor being both mortgagor and mortgagee therein, and by guaranty of the payment of the note secured by the mortgage which was likewise assigned, an equitable mortgage on the property described in the original mortgage was created enforceable as between the parties despite the defect in the original mortgage.—Motor Acceptance Co. v. (2) Where buyer at time of sale and as part of transaction agrees to give seller a mortgage to secure purchase price.—Union Nat. Bank v. Leidecker Tool Co., 178 P. 690, 72 Okl. 121.

(3) Where a tenant agreed to give his landlord a mortgage on certain chattels sold to him by his landlord, and his lease required him to give such a mortgage.—Page v. Riggins, Mo.App., 20 S.W.2d 164.

(4) Where purchaser, permitted to remain in possession of purchased land after notice of intention to cancel and terminate contract, agreed in writing to give a new note secured by mortgage on crops raised on the purchased land.—Scott v. Tuggle, 241 P. 229, 74 Mont. 476.

An equitable mortgage is not created by provision in an executory contract for the sale of realty requiring the purchaser to execute a chattel mortgage in favor of the vendor on crops to be grown during the life of the contract, when "the contract shows that the parties clearly understood that a lien could not be and was not created by the contract."—Atkinson v. and against those having actual notice of its existence,¹⁷ provided the oral agreement contains the elements necessary to constitute a valid written mortgage.¹⁸ The effect of the recording acts ordinarily is to render an oral mortgage invalid as against creditors and subsequent purchasers in good faith,¹⁹ and under some statutes as against purchasers with notice;²⁰ but, even under the recording acts, an oral mortgage is commonly regarded as valid where there is an immediate delivery of the property to the mortgagee, followed by an actual and continued change of possession.²¹

In some jurisdictions statutory provisions expressly²² or impliedly²³ requiring a mortgage to be in writing have been construed or applied in a number of cases.

In Texas

(1) The rule stated in the text is followed by the most recent cases.

U.S.—Border Nat. Bank v. Coupland, Tex., 240 F. 355, 153 C.C.A. 281, applying Texas law.

Tex.—Sparkman v. First State Bank of Handley, Com.App., 244 S.W. 127, 112 Tex. 33, answers to certified questions conformed to, Civ. App., 246 S.W. 724—Gordon v. Baldwin, Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 957, 964, error dismissed, citing Corpus Juris.

(2) There is no Texas statute which "in any way" modifies this rule.—Sparkman v. First State Bank of Handley, supra.

(3) The rule is unaffected by particular statutes providing as follows: That any reservation or limitation of use in goods where the possession remains in another is fraudulent as to creditors, unless declared by will or written instrument duly recorded; that all reservations of title in chattels as security for the purchase price, being declared mortgages, are void as to certain third parties unless in writing and registered; that all mortgages not properly registered are void as against certain third parties; and that a written transfer shall accompany the transfer of certain personal property, possession without such written transfer being deemed prima facie illegal.—Sparkman v. First State Bank of Handley, supra.

(4) As a consequence of the rule a written mortgage may be enlarged by a contemporaneous or subsequent oral agreement.—Moore v. B. & M. Chevrolet Co., supra.

(5) Prior to the above pronouncements it was settled that, under the statute a valid mortgage might be made by a verbal reservation of title in personal property to secure payment of the purchase price thereof.—Crews v. Harlan, 87 S.W. 656, 99 Tex. 93, 13 Ann.Cas. 863.

(6) But as to the validity of a verbal mortgage generally, there apparently was no authoritative decision.—Sparkman v. First State Bank of Handley, supra—11 C.J. p 454 note 98 [a] (2).

(7) The court of civil appeals had sustained such a mortgage as between the parties. — Edwards v. Mayes, Civ.App., 136 S.W. 510.

Sufficiency of words of transfer

(1) A valid mortgage sufficient to pass title is created by a note providing that the maker had "deposited as collateral security for the pay-

ly been held to be of great, if not indeed controlling, importance in determining that an informal transaction was not in fact a mortgage.²⁵

§ 51. Promise to Pay Debt

Questions pertaining to promises in mortgages to pay the mortgage debt ordinarily arise in reference to the existence of a deficiency and personal liability and are considered in § 419 infra.

§ 52. Statement as to Consideration

In some jurisdictions statutes require an affidavit stating the consideration for the instrument to accompany the mortgage; these affidavits are considered in § 84 infra.

§ 53. Defeasance or Statement of Condition

A mortgage should contain a defeasance clause, but, while its presence or absence is significant in determining whether an instrument is a mortgage, it is not essential to its validity nor need there be a provision enabling the mortgagee to take possession on default.

A characteristic of a mortgage is that there should be a defeasance,²⁶ and the absence of such a clause is a significant circumstance in determining whether or not an informal instrument or a bill of sale was intended as a mortgage;²⁷ but a defeasance clause is not essential to the validity of a mortgage.²⁸ If, from the nature of the instrument, standing alone, or read in the light of the surrounding circumstances, it appears to have been given as a security it must be considered as a mortgage,²⁹ or if an express defeasance is lacking one may be implied from the terms of the instrument.³⁰

As appears in § 6, supra, the defeasance may be contained in a separate instrument, but ordinarily the condition on the performance of which the transfer is to become void should be contained in the instrument by which the property is conveyed.³¹ It is not necessary that the mortgage contain a provision enabling the mortgagee to take possession in case of default,³² nor need it stipulate the time when the mortgagee shall take possession.³³

§ 54. Statement as to Mortgage in Obligation Secured

A note secured by a mortgage must, when the statute so provides, so state on its face or the mortgage is rendered void on the assignment of the note.

Under the Illinois statute, a note secured by a mortgage must so state on its face or the mortgage is rendered void on the assignment of the note.³⁴

Inadvertent cancellation of words of conveyance

Where a mortgage is executed in duplicate, the mortgagor signing both papers, one being filed with the register of deeds and the other retained by mortgagee, each paper is an original, and the filed instrument may be enforced without a formal correction of an inadvertent cancellation of the words of conveyance in the other.—*Emick v. Where a debtor conveyed his cotton-ginning plant to a trustee under an agreement that a corporation should be formed and stock issued to his creditors with the option to him of purchasing the stock by paying the creditors, it was held that the transaction, since it contained no element of defeasance, did not constitute a chattel mortgage.—*Trott v. Construction of statute

(1) The statute, although providing that "any chattel mortgage securing notes which do not state upon their face the fact of such security shall be absolutely void," applies only to instances where an assignment of the notes has taken place.—Sellers v. Thomas, 57 N.E. 10, 11, 185 Ill. 384, reversing 85 Ill.App. 58—Ohio Power Shovel Co. v. Bond, 267 Ill.App. 271, 277—Schillo v. White, 207 Ill.App. 390, 392—11 C.J. p 476 note 46.

(2) To construe the statute otherwise would necessitate holding it invalid as not embraced within its title. "An act to regulate the assignment of notes secured by chattel mortgages."—Hogan v. Akin, 55 N.E. 137, 138, 181 Ill. 448, reversing Thompson v. Akin, 81 Ill.App. 62.

(3) In an early case it was held that the statute applied even in the

§ 55. Description of Parties

As against third persons, the parties must be identifiable from the instrument or from inquiries suggested by it. Such defects as a misnomer of the mortgagor, where the mortgage is correctly signed and executed, or a misuse of the term "party of the first part," where the meaning is not confused, or a designation of a party by but one of several names by which he is known are not fatal.

A mortgage, to be effectual against third persons, must point out the parties so that a third person by its aid, together with the aid of such inquiries as the instrument itself suggests, may identify them;³⁵ but the courts frequently look beyond the description in the paper itself in determining the parties secured by a mortgage, and construe it to embrace or to exclude the persons contemplated on general legal principles, by the substance of the transaction.³⁶

A mortgage is not invalidated by a mistake in the name of the mortgagor if it is correctly signed and executed,³⁷ by designating the mortgagor by but one of several names by which he is known,³⁸ or by omitting the word "corporation" from the name of a corporate mortgagee in the mortgage.³⁹

The construction and application of various statutes requiring the mortgage to show the profession, trade, occupation, residence, or address of the parties are considered in the note.⁴⁰

Misuse of the term "party of the first part" does not render a mortgage invalid when the meaning of the instrument is not confused thereby;⁴¹ but, if the mortgage plainly designates one as party of the second part, the court cannot say by construction that "party of the first part" was intended.⁴²

Third person signing mortgage. By signing his name to a mortgage a third person may become bound as a party thereto, even though he is not elsewhere mentioned therein, it being necessary, however, that the intention that he be so bound be absence of an assignment of the mortgage note.—Quaintance v. Badham, 68 Ill.App. 87.

Sufficiency of statement of security

(1) A note reciting that it "covers deferred installments under a chattel mortgage made this day between the payee and maker thereof" sufficiently shows that the note was secured by a chattel mortgage.—B'ake-Silkwood Motor Co. v. Spires, 245 Ill.App. 148, 152.

(2) A recital in a note that another note secured by a mortgage was pledged as collateral security therefor does not meet the statutory requirement.—Chance v. Hudson, 233 Ill.App. 542.

As between the parties it has been held that compliance with the statute is not essential if possession of the mortgaged property is taken before the lien of a third party attaches.—Springer v. Lipsis, 70 N.E. 641, 209 Ill. 261.

Mortgagor described as "a Trust"
A mortgage made by the "Cicero

Rubber Company, a Trust," sufficiently identifies the "Cicero Rubber Company" as the mortgagor, the words "a Trust" being merely descriptive and not an essential part of the name.—Sedlak v. Standard Oil Co., 229 Ill.App. 378, 383.

40. Statement as to occupation

(1) Where statutory provisions require the mortgage to show the profession, trade, or occupation of the parties, these requirements must be regarded as matters of description intended for the purpose of identification and not as indispensable requisites of the mortgage without which it can have no effect as against third persons.—Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 53.

(2) Thus an omission of a statement as to the occupation of the parties is not fatal, as no "one could be prejudiced by such variations from the statutory form."—Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. v. Strobeck, 33 P.2d 1063, 1066, 139 Cal. App. 427.

Statement as to residence or address

(1) A statute making a mortgage invalid except as between the parties unless, among other things, "the residence of the mortgagor and mortgagee . . . shall be set out in the mortgage," does not require such facts to be expressly stated, it being sufficient if they can be ascertained from the language of the mortgage as a whole.—Garner v. Arizona Egyptian Cotton Co., 197 P. 231, 232, 22 Ariz. 318.

(2) Under a statute requiring mortgages substantially to comply with the form set out therein, which provides for, among other matters, a statement as to the residence of the mortgagor and mortgagee, such statement is not essential to substantial compliance with the statute and may be omitted.—Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. v. Strobeck, 33 P.2d 1063, 139 Cal.App. 427.

(3) A statute providing that "no mortgage shall be received for record . . . which does not contain the post office address of the mortgagee" has been construed to apply to real estate mortgages only, and not to chattel mortgages.—J. I. Case Co. v. Sax Motor Co., 256 N.W. 219, 220, 64 N.D. 757.

apparent from the mortgage after the application of the accepted rules of construction;⁴³ and in such case it is immaterial that the mortgage is worded in the singular.⁴⁴

§ 56. Description of Property

A mortgage must specify or describe the property mortgaged, but, in the absence of statutes otherwise providing, no particular manner of description is essential.

It is obvious that a mortgage must specify or describe the property mortgaged;⁴⁵ but, in the absence of statutes otherwise providing, it is not essential that the property be described in any particular manner.⁴⁶

(1) General Rules of Description

The rules as to the sufficiency of a description in a mortgage of chattels are less rigid than those applicable in the case of realty. The entire instrument and description, as well as the nature of the property, should be considered. An insufficiency of description as to part of the property or obliteration of the descriptive marks as to part will not invalidate the entire description.

As stated in Corpus Juris, which statement has been quoted and cited with approval, while the courts recognize well established principles for determining the sufficiency of the description of the property,⁴⁷ they also recognize the impossibility of fixing inflexible rules therefor.⁴⁸ Further, the rules generally applicable to chattel mortgages as to description are less rigid than those applied to conveyances of realty.⁴⁹ While it is the better practice to describe specifically the property mortgaged,⁵⁰ a general description is sufficient if specific enough to identify the property conveyed.⁵¹

In determining the sufficiency of the description, the entire description⁵² and instrument⁵³ should be

"In the operation of a sawmill and use of a logging outfit, it would be practically impossible to describe all the machines, tools, and apparatus, specifically in a trust deed or mortgage so that the property could be identified by a stranger by such description alone, and a general description which suggests inquiries, which, if pursued, will disclose the property mortgaged, is sufficient."—*Immel v. considered, as well as the character of the property intended to be mortgaged.⁵⁴ Further, the sufficiency of the description very frequently depends on the status of the person against whom the mortgage lien is sought to be asserted.⁵⁵

Partial insufficiency. An insufficient description of a portion of the property covered by the mortgage does not render the mortgage invalid as to the part which is correctly described.⁵⁶

Obliteration of marks. The mere fact that the distinguishing marks of personal property are obliterated or changed will not invalidate a description which is good when given.⁵⁷

Where successive mortgage deeds are given, the same general principles govern descriptions as where only one mortgage exists.⁵⁸

(2) As between Parties

As between the parties a description of the property mortgaged is sufficient if it so identifies the chattels that the mortgagee may say, with reasonable certainty, what is subject to his lien; a specific description is unnecessary.

As between the parties a description of the property mortgaged is sufficient if it so identifies the chattels that the mortgagee may say, with a reasonable degree of certainty, what property is subject to his lien,⁵⁹ and a specific description is unnecessary in cases not involving the rights of strangers, without notice.⁶⁰ Accordingly, a description insufficient as against third persons without notice may be amply sufficient as between the parties.⁶¹

(3) As against Third Persons

As against third persons, except those without interest in the property or with actual knowledge of the property conveyed, who stand in the same position as the mortgagor, the description must point out the property mortgaged so that they may identify it.

As against third persons the description in the mortgage must point out its subject matter so that such persons may identify the chattels covered,⁶³ to the exclusion of all other like property.⁶⁴ It is not essential, however, that the description be so specific that the property may be identified by it alone;⁶⁵ but it is sufficient if it suggests inquiries or means of identification which, if pursued, will

(1) "The strictness of the rules applied to chattel mortgages as to definiteness of description is only applied between the mortgagee and attaching creditors, subsequent incumbrancers and purchasers in good faith and for value."—Stoddard v. Ploeger, 247 P. 791, 793, 42 Idaho 688.

(2) As against persons having no interest in property mortgaged see infra § 57 c (3).

To avoid mortgage because of indefiniteness in the description of the property mortgaged, there must be uncertainty which remains after the mortgage has been interpreted in the light of the attendant circumstances and the parties' intent.—Abernathy v. Worthy, 129 So. 472, 221 Ala. 527—Smith v. Fields, 79 Ala. 335.

Pursuit of suggested inquiries required

Where a description is sufficient to put third persons on inquiry, from which inquiry the mortgaged property may be ascertained, such persons must inquire as to what property is covered by the mortgage.—Beckler v. Snerly, 273 S.W. 9, 169 Ark. 317.

In general, omnibus or roving descriptions in mortgages are too indefinite, general, and uncertain to furnish, through constructive notice thereof, means of identification, and furnish neither guide nor protection to either purchaser or seller, concerning specific chattels.

Insufficient description as merely preventing constructive notice

(1) It has been held that an "insufficient description [of the property] in the mortgage, which was valid between the parties operated merely to deprive the instrument of its character as constructive notice by reason of the recodation" of the instrument.—Hart County Deposit Bank v. Hatfield, 33 S.W.2d 660, 662, 236 Ky. 725.

"A description, assisted by external evidence that does not add to or contradict the terms of the contract, which will enable a third party to identify the property, is sufficient."—Hauseman Motor Co. v. Napierella, supra.

It is well settled that the rule requiring that a mortgage shall specify property on which it is to take effect does not require that description shall serve to identify property without the aid of parol evidence, where the instrument indicates within itself some method by which description, with aid of extrinsic evidence, can be defined and limited.—Paradies & Rich v. Warren Co., 186 S.E. 438, 53 Ga.App. 457—Stevens Hardware Co. v. Bank of Byromville, 129 S.E. 172, 34 Ga.App. 268. Admissibility of parol evidence to identify property see the C.J.S. title Evidence § 1007, also 22 C.J. p 1265 note 25.

Property described as that then sold to mortgagor

A mortgage, although describing the articles mortgaged too generally to identify them by the description

Any description of the property mortgaged sufficient as between the parties to the mortgage is sufficient as against a trespasser⁶⁹ or a stranger to the title;⁷⁰ and third persons without any rights or interest in the mortgaged property cannot complain of a description in a mortgage⁷¹ sufficient as between the parties thereto.⁷²

A description that is not sufficient to make the mortgage valid as against a bona fide purchaser without notice, or against an attaching creditor, may nevertheless be sufficient as between the mortgagee and a trespasser⁷³ or a stranger to the title.⁷⁴ So, when the holder of an unrecorded chattel mortgage by failing to record it loses his right of priority, the only question as to the sufficiency of the description in another recorded mortgage thereafter given is whether it was sufficient between the parties thereto.⁷⁵

Actual knowledge. Persons with actual knowledge of the property covered by the mortgage stand in no better position than the mortgagor in respect to their right to object to an insufficient description in the mortgage.⁷⁶ Thus, as against a third person purchasing the mortgaged property with actual notice of the mortgage lien thereon, the mortgage description of the property is sufficient if it constitutes a good description as between the parties thereto.⁷⁷

The fact that a third person has actual knowledge of the existence of the mortgage is, however, alone, is generally sufficient as against a third person where the instrument contains words identifying the property as that then sold or delivered to the debtor or purchased by him, as the identification may thereby be completed through the admission of parol testimony.—*Paradies & Rich v. Sufficiency as constructive notice not essential

Mo.—Kissick v. Kissick, 279 S.W. 764, 221 Mo.App. 420.

What is actual notice

(1) "Notice is actual within the meaning of the law where the purchaser knows of the existence of the adverse claim, or is conscious of having the means of knowledge, and does not use them, whether his knowledge is the result of a direct communication or is gathered from the facts and circumstances."—Bowman-Boyer Co. v. Burgett, 192 N.W. 795, 195 Iowa 674, 797.

(2) Where a commission company selling the mortgagor's cattle was informed, prior to the disposition of the proceeds from the sale, by a commission man and friend of the mortgagee that the cattle were covered by the latter's mortgage, such information "constituted notice of the mortgage" to the commission company, which could not regard the information as coming from a stranger having no actual knowledge of the facts.—Kissick v. Kissick, 279 S.W. 764, 766, 221 Mo.App. 420.

Inquiry not effective

Where a third person has knowledge of sufficient facts to place him on inquiry as to what property is covered by a mortgage description sufficient as between the parties but insufficient as against third persons without notice, a proper inquiry on his part failing to disclose the property covered by the mortgage acquits him of any knowledge of the property actually covered thereby.—American State Bank of Harrisburg v. Harding, Tex.Civ.App., 233 S.W. 102, dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Knowledge of sheriff

Where the mortgage description was insufficient as against third persons without notice, and the mortgaged property had been seized by a sheriff on behalf of a judgment creditor of the mortgagor, it was immaterial that immediately prior to the sale by the sheriff he was informed of the mortgage.—Crescent Realty Corporation of Delaware v. McFlynn, La.App., 159 So. 461.

77. Ga.—Messenger Pub. Co. v. Overstreet, 137 S.E. 125, 36 Ga.App. 458.

immaterial where the mortgage is void, even as between the parties thereto, for uncertainty in the description of the property mortgaged.⁷⁸

b. Statutory Provisions

Statutory requirements as to the sufficiency of the description must in general be complied with.

Statutes, expressly regulating, in some jurisdictions, the sufficiency of the description in a chattel mortgage have been construed and applied in a number of cases.⁷⁹

78. Mont.—Arro Oil & Refining Co. v. Montana & Dakota Grain Co., 286 P. 1115, 1117, 87 Mont. 259.

"Actual knowledge of the existence of the mortgage would impart only such notice as the mortgage itself gave, and such other information as might have been obtained upon pursuing the inquiry which the mortgage itself suggested."—Arro Oil & Refining Co. v. Montana & Dakota Grain Co., supra.

79. In Connecticut, that description in mortgage is too general and indefinite to comply with a statute requiring a "particular description" of the mortgaged property does not render the mortgage invalid as between the mortgagor and mortgagee.—Hartford-Connecticut Trust Co. v. Puritan Laundry of Hartford, 111 A. 149, 150, 95 Conn. 172.

In Louisiana

(1) Under a statute requiring a mortgage to set out "a full description of . . . [the] property . . . mortgaged, so that same may be identified" . . . it is not necessary that the . . . mortgage should contain such a description of the . . . property as will itself identify it but it is sufficient if the . . . [property] may be identified . . . from the description contained in the act [mortgage] together with information derived from inquiries suggested by it."—Commercial Bank of Arcadia v. Simmonds, 2 La.App. 658, 659.

(2) "All mortgages under . . . [the above statute] . . . must so describe the property as to permit identification without outside assistance except such as is otherwise admissible under the general law of evidence."—In re Ratcliff, D.C.La., 2 F.Supp. 193.

(3) It has, however, also been held that as against third persons "identification must be possible from the face of the instrument of mortgage."—Roberts v. Atkins, 141 So. 427, 428, 19 La.App. 634.

(4) The description of beauty shop equipment in a particular mortgage has been held sufficiently to meet the requirements of the statute set out in (1) supra.—Union Bldg. Corporation v. Burmeister, 173 So. 752, 186 La. 1027.

(5) So as to a description of office furniture and equipment.—Remington-Rand, Inc., v. Profits Island Gravel Co., App., 144 So. 636, opinion reinstated 150 So. 76.

(6) So as to a description of a refrigerator counter, cooler coil, valve, condensing unit, grocer refrigerator, and meat cooler.—Maroun v. Marrs, App., 178 So. 723.

(7) The description of pole pilings in a particular mortgage has been held insufficiently to comply with the statute set out in (1) supra.—Christian v. Langford, 124 So. 593, 11 La.App. 652.

(8) So as to a description of a refrigerator.—Consolidated Cos. v. Laws, 124 So. 775, 11 La.App. 676.

In Maryland "the description of the personal property conveyed by a bill of sale required by the Maryland Code (article 21, § 41) is only a general description by its location, ownership, and general characteristics."—In re Durham, D.C.Md., 114 F. 750, 754.

In South Carolina

(1) The property must be described in writing or typewriting, but not printing; otherwise it is void. U.S.—In re Manning, D.C.S.C., 206 F. 685.

S.C.—State v. Perry, 70 S.E. 304, 87 S.C. 535—Rose v. Harlee, 48 S.E. 541, 69 S.C. 523.

(2) But, if the mortgage description is in writing, the instrument is valid, although other words of conveyance are printed.—State v. Perry, supra.

(3) This statute has been held to be valid and constitutional.—Rose v. Harlee, supra.

80. In Connecticut

(1) A designation of the subject matter of a mortgage as all machinery, tools, equipment, and fixtures located on certain premises of the mortgagor or in a specified city is, where the mortgagor retains possession, insufficient as against third persons under a statute requiring a particular description of such property when possession thereof is re-

c. All Property of a Particular Kind or Location

A description of the property as all of the mortgagor's property of a certain kind, or of every kind, in a specified locality or in his possession, is, unless there is a contrary statutory provision, sufficient as against third persons.

In the absence of statutory requirements to the contrary,⁸⁰ a description designating the subject matter as all the mortgagor's property of a certain kind in a specified locality⁸¹ or in his possession by the mortgagor.—City Nat. Bank v. Stoeckel, 132 A. 20, 103 Conn. 732—11 C.J. p 460 note 43.

(2) Such a designation is, however, sufficient as between the parties to the mortgage.—Hartford-Connecticut Trust Co. v. Puritan Laundry of Hartford, 111 A. 149, 95 Conn. 172—11 C.J. p 460 note 43.

In Louisiana, under a statute requiring a mortgage to set out "a full description of . . . [the] . . . property . . . mortgaged, so that the same may be identified," a description of the property as all the mortgagor's property, or as all the mortgagor's property of a certain kind, located at a specified place, is insufficient. —Continental Bank & Trust Co. v. Succession of McCann, 92 So. 55, 56, 151 La. 555—Durel v. Buchanan, 86 So. 189, 147 La. 804—Le Corgne v. Garner, 7 La.App. 148.

sion⁸² is generally considered sufficient as against third persons; and a description merely describing the property conveyed as all the mortgagor's property of a certain kind,⁸³ or of every kind of which he is possessed,⁸⁴ is sufficient as between the parties; but, while there is authority to the contrary,⁸⁵ a description covering all the mortgagor's personal property of every kind is, standing alone, insufficient as against third persons,⁸⁶ although such a description has been held sufficient where it contains additionally a statement as to the location⁸⁷ and possession⁸⁸ of the property mortgaged.

The effect of a specific statement of the location of the property as curing an otherwise insufficient general description is considered in § 64 infra.

d. Motor Vehicles

A description of a motor vehicle is sufficient if a third person aided by such inquiries as the mortgage suggests can identify the vehicle intended. A misdescription of the motor or serial number is fatal.

While a motor vehicle should be described in a mortgage by giving as fully as possible the details furnishing the means of identification,⁸⁹ a description is generally held to be sufficient if it will enable a third person, aided by such inquiries as the instrument itself indicates and suggests, to identify the vehicle intended to be mortgaged.⁹⁰ Thus an automobile has been held to be sufficiently described, for the purposes of an action to enforce a lien or as against purchasers and third persons, when it is designated by make or name and model, and as the only one kept by the party at a certain place;⁹¹ by make, model, and age;⁹² by make, model, and engine number;⁹³ and as having been purchased from a named person on a given date;⁹⁴ by make and engine number alone;⁹⁵ by state license number, seal number, and engine number;⁹⁶ or by make and location, and as being of a certain age⁹⁷ or horse power;⁹⁸ and, as against third persons, a truck has been held to be sufficiently described by specifying its make and capacity, when it is shown that the mortgagor had but one truck of that description,⁹⁹ or by designating it by the owner's name, the county of its location, and the purpose for which it is used.¹ A description of an automobile by make and year is sufficient as against a third person with notice.²

As between the parties, a description is sufficient which describes a truck by make, model, and style

alone,³ or an automobile by make and model, although the number or location is not stated, where it is the only car owned by the party;⁴ but, if the vehicle intended cannot be identified from the description, the instrument is ineffectual and cannot be enforced.⁵

A description has been held to be insufficient as against third persons which describes an automobile merely by make and capacity,⁶ and as being in the mortgagor's possession in a certain county;⁷ by make and style,⁸ or by make, model, and style;⁹ or which describes a truck merely by make and capacity;¹⁰ or by make, style, and capacity.¹¹

Under a statute requiring a full description of the property mortgaged so that it may be identified, a description of an automobile by make, style, color, and model, without giving the motor or serial number, is insufficient as against third persons;¹² and a description by style and number alone, without specifying the make and designating the number as being the motor number, is likewise insufficient.¹³

Erroneous description. Since the motor and serial numbers are the distinctive marks by which cars of the same make are identified one from the other,¹⁴ an erroneous designation of the motor¹⁵ or serial¹⁶ number is generally held to render the mortgage insufficient as against third persons, particularly when other parts of the description are likewise erroneous.¹⁷

It has also been held that an intrinsically false and misleading description renders the mortgage invalid¹⁸ and ineffective to create a mortgage lien.¹⁹

§ 58. — Reference to Other Instruments

Although there is authority to the contrary, it is generally held that the description of the mortgaged property may be contained in a separate writing which is attached or referred to.

Although there is authority to the contrary,²⁰ the description of the property mortgaged may be contained in a separate writing,²¹ as in a schedule attached to the mortgage²² at the place where the property would otherwise have been described;²³ and, where such writing is attached to the mortgage, it has been held that it need not be specifically referred to.²⁴ Further, the description may be completed by reference to a bill of sale²⁵ which is to be recorded,²⁶ or may be contained in another mortgage which is on record and is referred to,²⁷ even though the mortgage referred to was satisfied and withdrawn from record a few days after the execution of the later mortgage,²⁸ or although it does not specifically mention the fact that the mortgage referred to is on file.²⁹ Likewise a reference to a schedule attached to another mortgage which is on file is sufficient.³⁰ Failure to attach a schedule referred to as attached, however, is fatal to the validity of the description,³¹ unless the property is otherwise sufficiently described.³²

gage, such writing will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be presumed to have been attached prior to the execution of the mortgage.³³

§ 59. — Effect of Nonexistence of Other Like Property

The scarcity or plenitude of chattels of a similar kind is a factor in determining the sufficiency of the description, which when indefinite may be aided by the nonexistence of other property to which the terms of the mortgage could apply.

The scarcity or plenitude of chattels similar to those mortgaged is an element to be considered in determining the sufficiency of the description of the chattels covered by the mortgage,³⁴ and the nonexistence of other property to which the terms of the mortgage could apply frequently renders valid a description in a mortgage which otherwise would be too indefinite.³⁵

§ 60. — Property Not Yet Acquired or in Existence

To cover after-acquired property, the mortgage must clearly express such intent and describe the property so that it may be identified.

If the mortgage is designed to cover after-acquired property, whether in esse or not, it is necessary that such an intent be clearly³⁶ expressed,³⁷ and that the property be described so that it may be identified,³⁸ for example, by stating that it is to

Selection equivalent to identification

(1) A subsequent mutual selection by the parties of the chattels mortgaged is itself such an identification of the mortgaged property as to render the mortgage valid as between the parties, irrespective of the sufficiency of the description.—Silver v. Wickfield Farms, 227 N.W. 97, 209 Iowa 856—Theodore Hamm Brewing Co. v. Flagstad, 166 N.W. 289, 182 Iowa 826.

§ 61. — Part of Larger Number or Quantity

Except as to chattels of uniform quality and value, a mortgage of an undefined portion of a larger number or quantity of a like kind is, while usually upheld as between the parties, ordinarily regarded as invalid as to third persons although the defect may be cured by a subsequent identification of the property intended to be covered. The subsequent commingling of the mortgaged property with other like property does not, unless assented to by the mortgagee, affect the validity of the description.

The decisions are not uniform as to the sufficiency of a description of property constituting a part of a larger number or quantity of a like kind.⁴⁶ As between the parties such mortgages, although indefinitely phrased, are usually upheld since the mortgagee, or his assignee, has the right of selection.⁴⁷ However, when the rights of third persons become involved, the great weight of authority supports the rule that a mortgage of a specified number of chattels out of a larger number, or of a specified quantity out of a larger mass, which does not furnish data for the separation of the mortgaged chattels, is, when there is no separation or delivery, void for uncertainty,⁴⁸ except as to claimants with actual no-the execution of the mortgage renders it valid between the parties as to chattels thus selected, notwithstanding the indefiniteness of the description thereof.—Casco Mercantile & Trust Co. v. Central Sav. Bank & Trust Co., 226 P. 868, 75 Colo. 478.

Provision permitting selection as not invalidating mortgage

A mortgage on a specified number of cattle, stipulating that if the mortgagor owned a larger number the mortgagee should have a right of selection, is not rendered invalid as between the parties, when it appears that the mortgagor had a larger number of similar cattle, on the theory that a mortgage of chattels to be selected confers no title until selection where the mortgaged cattle had been selected and identified prior to the execution of the mortgage.—Casco Mercantile & Trust Co. v. Central Sav. Bank & Trust Co., supra.

tice that the property claimed by them is covered by the mortgage,⁴⁹ although in some jurisdictions such a mortgage is upheld on the theory that the mortgagee has the right of selection,⁵⁰ and in at least one jurisdiction it has been upheld under applicable statutory provisions.⁵¹

A defect in a mortgage, from lack of separation or other identification of the property meant to be covered, may be cured by such subsequent action of the parties as removes doubt as to the identity of the property mortgaged.⁵² So, if the mortgage provides that the part mortgaged is to be subsequently separated and delivered at a certain place, and these conditions have been complied with, the description is sufficient.⁵³ The mere fact that the mortgaged property is kept in the same place as other similar property of other owners will not invalidate it as against third persons if the mortgaged property can be identified.⁵⁴

Chattels of uniform quality and value. Where the mortgaged chattels are of a uniform quality and value, such as are ascertained by weight, measure, or count, and the constituent parts, which make up the mass, are not distinguished by any physical difference in size, shape, or quality, a mortgage of a part of the undivided whole is valid for all purposes.⁵⁵

Subsequent confusion of chattels. If when the mortgage was given the property mortgaged was separate, the fact that it is afterward commingled with other similar property does not affect the validity of the description⁵⁶ unless the confusion of the property occurs with the consent of the mortgagee, in which case the mortgage will be valid only with respect to those articles which can be identified.⁵⁷

§ 62. — Larger Number or Quantity than Mortgagor Owns

The fact that the mortgage describes a larger number or quantity of particular chattels than the mortgagor possesses does not render it uncertain.

When the description covers a larger number or quantity of particular chattels than the mortgagor possesses, there is no other property of the same kind from which a selection is to be made, and therefore no uncertainty.⁵⁸

§ 63. — Exceptions or Reservations from Description

Specific articles may be definitely excepted from a general description by which they would otherwise be included, but a general exception of exempt property, without designation of the property claimed as exempt, is not in all jurisdictions sufficient.

Where there is a sufficient designation of the property included it is permissible for a mortgage of a mass of property to except certain articles which would be included under the general description,⁵⁹ but excepting such articles as the mortgagor's vendor may desire to retain,⁶⁰ or stock in trade to a certain value,⁶¹ has been held too vague and renders the mortgage void for uncertainty.

In some jurisdictions, it is held that a chattel mortgage is not rendered void by the fact that it excepts from the description of the property those articles which are exempt from sale under execution without specifying what articles are claimed to be exempt,⁶² while in other jurisdictions the contrary rule prevails.⁶³

§ 64. — Location, Ownership, and Possession

- a. Necessity of stating
- b. Sufficiency of statement
- c. Effect of statement
- d. Subsequent removal of property

a. Necessity of Stating

The location of the property must be stated to validate the mortgage as against third persons without notice if it is not or cannot be otherwise sufficiently identified, and generally a failure to state either the location, ownership, or possession of the property is fatal.

When neither the location, the ownership, nor the possession of the property is stated in the mortgage, it is ordinarily fatal to the description;⁶⁴ and in all cases the location of the property mortgaged must be stated, where the property cannot otherwise be sufficiently identified,⁶⁵ or it is not otherwise sufficiently described,⁶⁶ and in such case an erroneous statement of the location invalidates the mortgage as to third persons without notice.⁶⁷

Ordinarily, however, a statement of location is but one of several elements of the description,⁶⁸ and where the property is otherwise sufficiently described it may be omitted,⁶⁹ or, if erroneously stated, may be rejected as surplusage,⁷⁰ unless misleading.⁷¹ In any event, as between the parties, an erroneous statement of the location will not affect its validity.⁷²

b. Sufficiency of Statement

According to some authorities, but not all, the statement may be aided by the presumption that the mortgagor is the owner of the property which he assumes to mortgage. Location is ordinarily regarded as sufficiently stated if the instrument suggests inquiries which will lead to the information.

As a general rule, the location of the mortgaged property is sufficiently stated if the instrument suggests inquiries which, if pursued, would enable third persons to ascertain the situation thereof at the time of the execution of the mortgage.⁷³ Ordinarily it is not sufficient merely to state that the property is located in a certain county,⁷⁴ or that the mortgagor is of a certain county,⁷⁵ or that the property is located in a certain town⁷⁶ or territory.⁷⁷ On the other hand, the location of the property is sufficiently indicated by a recital that the mortgagor is the owner and has possession, and that he resides at a stated place,⁷⁸ or where such facts may be

(2) Where a mortgage recited that the mortgaged cattle, purchased on the day of its execution at a distant place, were "to be kept" on certain described premises belonging to the mortgagor, a subsequent unfilled form paragraph in the mortgage stating that the "cattle are kept on my premises on section No. as above, in township No. —, range No. —," is not misleading, as indicating "that the cattle were then on a place not described."—Wertheimer & Degen v. Avery State Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 283 S.W. 322, 324.

Location inferred from instrument

"It is enough that the location of the property may be determined by fair inference drawn from the entire instrument."—Elgin v. Dehart, 132 S.E. 323, 325, 144 Va. 311.

"To be kept"

A mortgage statement that the mortgaged cattle "are to be kept" on certain described premises is not a statement of their existing location at the time of the execution of the mortgage.—Wertheimer & Degen v. Shultice, 211 N.W. 568, 573, 202 Iowa 1140.

Incorrect address of double house

An incorrect statement that the mortgaged property is located at 536 S. H. street, when in fact it is located at 538 S. H. street, is not rendered sufficient as a statement of location by the fact that both addresses represented but the respective sides of a double house resting upon one foundation and covered by one roof.—Burglass v. Manfre, La. App., 168 So. 328.

Location sufficiently designated

(1) Property described as shipped to the mortgagor "corner of Texas & Spring streets, Shreveport, Caddo Parish, Louisiana." — Maroun v. Marrs, La.App., 178 So. 723, 726.

(2) Household goods "contained in the property situate on the northeast corner of" designated streets in a named town.—Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. v. Hoffman, 25 P. 2d 1007, 1008, 134 Cal.App. 604.

(3) A mortgage on bakery equipment recorded in the county of the property's location reciting that in case of default the property is to be sold in a certain civil district in that county, sufficiently shows the location of the property where it appears that the mortgagor had but one bakery. — Klimes v. Jones, 7 Tenn.App. 583.

Location insufficiently designated

(1) A recital that the mortgaged animals were "located on the above place," when four different places were described in the mortgage, without designating which was intended.—Bank of Williston v. Gamble, 145 S.E. 626, 627, 148 S.C. 49.

reasonably inferred from the entire instrument.⁷⁹ It has also been held sufficiently definite that the instrument show that the mortgagor is a resident of a certain county, and that the property is in his possession,⁸⁰ or is to remain in his possession, until default in payment.⁸¹ Likewise, where the mortgage contains an additional provision forbidding removal of the chattel from a certain county, it has been held sufficient.⁸² Further, where the property is specifically located as being on certain land, the failure to state the county⁸³ and state⁸⁴ where the land is situated has been held not fatal when the mortgage, in compliance with the law, is recorded in the county where the property is located.

Presumption of ownership. The description may be aided by the presumption that the mortgagor is the owner of the property.⁸⁵ There is, however, authority to the contrary.⁸⁶

c. Effect of Statement

An accurate statement of the location and possession of the property may cure an otherwise insufficient description and is controlling.

Where the description of the property is general, its location becomes an important element, since it may be the only means of adequate identification,⁸⁷ and in such case a specific statement of its location,⁸⁸ and possession,⁸⁹ if accurate,⁹⁰ will cure an otherwise insufficient description. Where the exact location of the mortgaged property is stated, the description is thus limited, and will not cover property situated in a place independent of, or different from, that designated in the mortgage.⁹¹

d. Subsequent Removal of Property

The subsequent removal of the mortgaged property without fraud between the parties will not affect the validity of the description.

The subsequent removal of the mortgaged property from the premises described in the mortgage will in no wise affect or destroy its validity,⁹² unless done in accordance with the fraudulent connivance of the mortgagor and the mortgagee.⁹³ or brands, particularly in connection with their location, ownership, or possession, which will enable the animals to be identified is sufficient although they may be subsequently changed in appearance.

Although the courts recognize certain general principles determining the sufficiency of the description of animals in a chattel mortgage, they are not uniform in the application of such principles when the rights of third persons become involved.⁹⁴ In general a description is sufficient which suggests inquiries which, if pursued, would enable third persons to identify the mortgaged property.⁹⁵ Thus a description by the animals' characteristics together with a statement as to their location, ownership, or possession has been held to be sufficient.⁹⁶ Many cases, however, hold that animals are sufficiently described by merely stating their characteristics with respect to age, color, height, sex, and weight,⁹⁷ or by indicating their marks and brands,⁹⁸ while other cases have held such description to be insufficient, as against third persons, in the absence of a statement as to location, ownership, or possession,⁹⁹ or some other additional means of identification.¹ A description merely designating animals by species or class and the number mortgaged is insufficient;² but such a description has been held sufficient when reference is made to the location of § 67. — Crops

- a. In general
- b. Sufficiency of description
- c. Part of crop

a. In General

A mortgage covering crops growing or to be grown must designate with certainty the time and year of growth and the land on which the crop is to be produced. It is not essential to specify in terms the nature and kind of crop conveyed.

When a growing crop, or one to be planted, is conveyed by a chattel mortgage, the description must designate with certainty the time or year of growth,¹⁹ and the land on which the crop is to be produced;²⁰ but it is not necessary for the mortgage to specify or state in terms the nature and kind of crop intended to be conveyed to the mortgagee,²¹ and a mortgage on crops to be grown on land, which is to be subsequently selected, is sufficient in equity to create a lien on such crops.²²

b. Sufficiency of Description

- (1) In general
- (2) Time of growth
- (3) Place of growth

(1) In General

The description is sufficient as against third persons if it, together with inquiries suggested thereby, enables a prudent, disinterested person to identify the property. As between the parties a description is sufficiently definite when so treated by them, and as against third persons with actual notice of the crop mortgaged the sufficiency of the description is immaterial. Generally, a description covering a larger quantity than grown is not void.

As against third persons the description of a crop is sufficient if it be such that a prudent, disinterested person, aided and directed by such inquiries as the instrument itself suggests, is able to identify the property.²³ Thus, a mortgage covering all or the entire crop of the mortgagor, taken in connection with the mortgagor's residence or the location of the land on which it is to be grown, is ordinarily sufficient to suggest such inquiries.²⁴

As between the parties it has been held that a description is sufficiently definite when so treated by them,²⁵ and, as against a third person who has actual knowledge that the crop is mortgaged, the sufficiency of the description is immaterial.²⁶

Larger quantity than grown. Where the description of a crop covers a larger quantity than is grown on the land, it is generally held that there is no uncertainty and hence the mortgage is not rendered void thereby,²⁷ although in some jurisdictions the contrary rule prevails.²⁸

(2) Time of Growth

The time or year of growth is sufficiently stated if it may be inferred from the terms of the mortgage. A mortgage is not rendered indefinite by covering successive crops until the debt is paid.

It is sufficient that the time or year of growth may be inferred from the terms of the mortgage, although not stated in express language.²⁹ A mort-

Description of crop as growing

(1) A description of a corn crop as growing without a specification of the year has been held a sufficient description of the crop with respect to its year of growth.—McCormick v. Farmers' Grain & Milling Co., 197 P. 429, 51 Cal.App. 557—11 C.J. p 469 note 40 [a] (4).

(2) A mortgage on a hay crop executed December, 1917, not stating the year in which the crop is to be raised, has been held insufficient to cover the crop grown and harvested in 1918 under the theory that such crop was growing at the time of execution of the mortgage.—Sonka v. Yonkers, 180 N.W. 876, 191 Iowa 599.

gage is not rendered indefinite by the fact that it covers successive crops until the debt is paid.³⁰

Where a mortgage expressly states the time of growth as two successive seasons, the inclusion of crops for the second season prohibited by a statute does not invalidate the mortgage as to crops for the first season permitted thereby.³¹

(3) Place of Growth

A description of the place of growth of a crop is ordinarily sufficient if the mortgage states that it is to be raised on land in a certain county, township, range, and section, or refers to the land as owned by a certain person in a named county or township. In general merely designating the county is insufficient. An error in location does not invalidate the mortgage unless misleading and nothing remains to suggest inquiries which will identify the property.

A description of the place of growth of a crop is sufficient if the mortgage states that it is to be raised on land in a certain county, township, range, and section,³² although in some jurisdictions a more particular description is required;³³ or refers to the land as belonging to a certain person³⁴ in a named county³⁵ or township;³⁶ or describes it as the land of a certain person located a stated distance and direction from a particular town in a named county³⁷ or state.³⁸ As a general rule, however, a mere statement of the county in which the crop is to be raised is not sufficient to put third persons on inquiry,³⁹ although in some jurisdictions

(3) A description covering "all hay grown . . . during the life of this mortgage," the mortgage expiring in less than a year after its execution, sufficiently described the year of growth of the crop.—Livestock Credit Corporation v. Corbett, 22 P.2d 874, 875, 53 Idaho 190.

Inference aided by statute

(1) Under a statute providing that a mortgage on unsown crops shall be void unless the crops are to be sown within one year from the time of the execution of the mortgage, a mortgage on such a crop not specifying the year of growth sufficiently describes a crop sowed during the year following the date of the mortgage as it cannot be presumed that the parties intended a crop subsequent to that year which would render the mortgage void under the statute.—Myers-Shepley Co. v. Milwaukee Grain Elevator Co., 214 P. 1051, 124 Wash. 583.

(2) A crop mortgage in which the year of growth is not stated is not rendered certain by a statute providing that a chattel mortgage shall attach only to the crop next maturing after the delivery of the mortgage, where the statute exempts from its provisions mortgages securing particular debts, as a third person is not bound to assume that the mortgage is not within the exemptions of the statute.—Teigen v. Occident Elevator Co., 200 N.W. 38, 51 N.D. 563.

Inference from maturity of indebtedness

(1) A mortgage covering crops not yet sown without specifying the year in which the crops were to be grown, but stating it was given to secure a note which would mature the following fall, is sufficient to indicate that the crop covered thereby was that to be planted during the current year, so that the mortgage was not void for indefiniteness or uncertainty.—Myers-Shepley Co. v. Milwaukee Grain Elevator Co., 214 P. 1051, 124 Wash. 583.

(2) Where a crop mortgage fails to state the year in which the crop is to be raised, it may be concluded from the fact that the mortgage secured an indebtedness due later in the same year in which the mortgage was given that the crops secured thereby was one to be raised during that year.—Robinson v. Saxon Mills, 117 S.E. 424, 124 S.C. 415.

Particular statute applied

A statute declaring that "any provision in a mortgage . . . [covering] any crop . . . grown later than during the season beginning May 1 next following the date thereof shall be void . . . but such provision shall not affect the validity of any other . . . provision of the mortgage," does not render a crop mortgage covering crops "grown . . . during the year 1922-23" invalid "as to the crops raised during the season of 1922."—Strandin v. Spreiter, supra.

Identification from record with reasonable certainty required

"The description of the land, crops upon which are mortgaged, should be sufficiently definite, in order to be notice to purchasers of such crops for value, so that one examining the record could, with reasonable certainty, identify and know where the crop really is which is mortgaged."—Teigen v. Occident Elevator Co., 200 N.W. 38, 39, 51 N.D. 563.—First State Bank of New Leipzig v. Kellogg Commission Co., 170 N.W. 635, 636, 41 N.D. 269.

Owner of several farms

A crop mortgage describing the place of growth as the farm of a named third person is not rendered insufficient in description by the fact that such third person owns several farms in the county in which the mortgage was filed when inquiries suggested by the mortgage would have identified the particular farm intended to be described.

Title held adversely

A description in a crop mortgage describing the crop as "to be grown on the farm of Bob Earl," in a named township, is sufficient where the crop was raised in an inclosure known as the "Bob Earl field," although on land in fact belonging to another, but which Earl held adversely during the period of the mortgagor's possession which was not disturbed until after the crop had been gathered and sold.—Eades v. Simpson, supra.

such a general description has been held sufficient when it covers all of the crops⁴⁰ or all of a particular crop⁴¹ grown by the mortgagor, while others have held it sufficient when the mortgage also contains a recital that the land is owned⁴² or rented⁴³ by the mortgagor. It has also been held sufficient if the mortgage recites that the crop is in the possession of the mortgagor or is not to be removed from a county stated.⁴⁴ Other descriptions of the place of growth which have been held sufficient⁴⁵ or insufficient⁴⁶ will be found in the notes hereto.

It is not essential that the county,⁴⁷ section,⁴⁸ township,⁴⁹ or range⁵⁰ in which the crop is to be raised should be stated in the mortgage if it contains other adequate elements of identification.

Statutory provisions. Under a statute requiring that the land on which the crop is to be grown shall be "described or mentioned," it has been held that it is not necessary that the land be described by metes and bounds, it being sufficient if the ownership of the land is mentioned,⁵¹ or the name of the land is stated together with its location with reference to a particular town.⁵² However, under such statute a description of the property as "all my crops," etc., without mention of the land, is insufficient.⁵³ Under another statute requiring the land on which the crop is grown to be "fully described," a description merely stating the county in which the land is located is insufficient.⁵⁴

Erroneous statement as to location. An error in the statement of the location of the land on which the crop is grown does not invalidate the mortgage as against third persons⁵⁵ unless the discrepancy is

In Texas

(1) A description covering "any three bales of cotton to be planted and cultivated by me in the year 1912 on the place known as the _____ farm, _____ miles from R., or any other farm in C. county," is insufficient as it points out no particular land on which the cotton was to be produced.—Watson v. D. A. Paddleford & Son, 221 S.W. 569, 110 Tex. 525, answering certified questions, Civ.App., 220 S.W. 779, and 223 S.W. 1117.

(2) A similar description as that stated above, except that it covered all the crops thus raised by the mortgagor, has been held to indefinite as not describing any particular place in the named county, in the absence of proof of the parties' intention to subject to the mortgage crops raised on a particular place.—Smith v. Coburn, Tex.Civ.App., 222 S.W. 344.

(3) But a mortgage on "all . . . crops . . . grown by [the mortgagor] . . . on any land cultivated by [him] in" a named county is sufficient in description as to crops raised on land in the named county in the possession of, and being cultivated by, the mortgagor at the date of the mortgage.—Houston Nat. Exch. Bank v. Osceola Irrigating Co., Civ.App., 261 S.W. 561.

misleading,⁵⁶ and nothing remains to suggest inquiries which will identify the mortgaged property.⁵⁷ A mortgage with an error in the description as to the location of the property will be upheld against third persons with actual knowledge that the property is mortgaged.⁵⁸

c. Part of Crop

A mortgage of an undivided portion of a crop as such may properly so describe it, but where the mortgage covers a distinct or segregated part of a crop it must ordinarily so describe such part, or furnish data, so that it may be identified. An indefinite description may be cured by a subsequent separation.

Location generally see supra § 64.

Misdescription or false description generally see infra § 69.

Curing defective description generally see infra § 70.

Misdescription of township

A description of the location of the land as being in a certain township is not rendered insufficient by the fact that a resurvey shows part of the land to be in another township where the description is otherwise sufficient as notice to third persons of the land intended to be included in the mortgage.—Eades v. Simpson, 191 S.W. 953, 127 Ark. 162.

Misstatement of place or township immaterial

In a mortgage on the entire crop of the mortgagor grown in a named county, it is "immaterial whether there was a mistake in naming the place on which the . . . [crop] was grown or the township in which the place was situated."—Lesser-Goldman Cotton Co. v. Hembree, 259 S.W. 5, 6, 163 Ark. 88.

Mislocation in section

A mortgage is not rendered insufficient as against a third person by the fact that it erroneously described the land as located in a certain part of a correctly described section, the land being in fact located in another part of that section, when the mortgage suggests inquiries which, when pursued, would lead to the ascertainment of the property intended to be included in the mortgage.—Harp v. First Nat. Bank, 37 P.2d 930, 169 Okl. 548.

Misstatement of ownership

(1) A misstatement of the name of the owner of the lands on which the crop is to be grown does not render the description insufficient when the description is otherwise "sufficient to enable anyone to identify the crop."—Corder v. G. B. Sprouse & Co., 100 S.W.2d 1001, 1003, 20 Tenn. App. 486.

(2) The fact that "M. Story," described in a crop mortgage as the owner of the land on which the crop was located, was also known as "Dave Story," did not render the description insufficient when the land could be identified from inquiries suggested by the mortgage.—Ake v. General Grain Co., 72 P.2d 735, 181 Okl. 117.

Location and ownership inaccurately stated

A description of cotton in a recorded mortgage as all the mortgagor's crop of eighty acres on "The Porter Walker farm" was sufficiently definite to put a buyer on inquiry, who knew the crop had been grown there and believed it subject to a landlord's lien, although the farm's location was inaccurately stated and the farm belonged to Fred Walker, Porter Walker's lessor.—Matthews v. Melasky, Tex.Civ.App., 240 S.W. 641, 642.

56. Okl.—Ake v. General Grain Co., 72 P.2d 735, 181 Okl. 117.

11 C.J. p 470 note 55.

Government subdivision misnamed

Where by mistake a mortgage described the crop as located in a particular quarter of a named section, while in fact the crop was located in another quarter in a different section, although the township and range was correctly stated, the description was insufficient as against a third person who had no knowledge of such mistake.—Bair v. Wiese, 215 P. 61, 124 Wash. 691.

Description held not misleading

A description in a crop mortgage was not so misleading as to be insufficient as against a third person because of the use of the words "T. K. Treckel and M. Story Farm" in stating the location of the crop, rather than "T. K. Treckel and M. Story farms," which was correct, when reasonable inquiries suggested by the mortgage would have identified the property covered by the mortgage.—Ake v. General Grain Co., 72 P.2d 735, 736, 181 Okl. 117.

Sufficient description of undivided interest

A mortgage covering "all interest in and to any and all crops" grown during a named year on described lands sufficiently describes the mortgagor's undivided three-fifths interest in the crop.—Helgeson v. Farmers' Co-op. Ass'n, Jackson, supra.

60. S.C.—Robinson v. Saxon Mills, 117 S.E. 424, 426, 124 S.C. 415.

"One . . . bale of cotton" out of larger number

(1) A description covering "One 500-pound bale of 'good middling cotton'" to be grown on a described place is sufficient, even though the mortgagor raised a larger number of bales on the described land.—Robinson v. Saxon Mills, supra.

(2) In the above description it was held that the grade of the cotton was not designated "as a matter of description, but as a basis of security," and therefore the description covered "as much cotton as would have amounted in value to . . . [the] grade and quantity" specified.—Robinson v. Saxon Mills, supra.

(1) "Any three bales of cotton to be . . . cultivated by me in the year 1912 on the place known as"

arating the mortgaged part from the whole,⁶² particularly where the crop is not uniform in quality or value.⁶³ So a mortgage covering crops growing on a certain number of acres in a larger tract, without specifying the particular part intended, is void for uncertainty,⁶⁴ even as between the parties themselves;⁶⁵ but, when the mortgage covers an undivided interest in the whole of the crop, it is not necessary that it designate the manner in which the interest conveyed should be separated from the balance.⁶⁶

Subsequent separation. A description which is indefinite may be cured if the part mortgaged is subsequently separated so as to be capable of identification.⁶⁷

Excepting part of crop. As between the parties

the description of a mortgage has been held sufficient where it covers all of the grantor's crop except an unsegregated part,⁶⁸ or where it reserves what the law exempts.⁶⁹

§ 68. — Stock in Trade

Stock in trade may be described in a mortgage thereof by general terms, a schedule or particular enumeration being ordinarily unnecessary; but if the description misstates or fails to state the property's location or the person in possession thereof it is insufficient as against third persons.

Ordinarily, stock in trade may be described in a mortgage thereof, by general terms,⁷⁰ as all the property of that nature in a certain store,⁷¹ or all of the mortgagor's goods in a certain place,⁷² and a schedule or particular enumeration of the mortgaged chattels is unnecessary;⁷³ but in some juetc., "is not such a description as will identify any particular cotton that might be raised by the mortgagor."—Watson v. D. A. Paddleford & Son, Civ.App., 220 S.W. 779, 780, certified questions answered 221 S.W. 569, 110 Tex. 525.

(2) "The first four bales of cotton and cotton seed" grown on a particular farm in a certain year is sufficiently definite and specific to segregate the part mortgaged from the other part of the crop.—Ross v. Schultz, Civ.App., 198 S.W. 672, 673.

(3) But on the theory that the mortgagee has the right of selection, a mortgage covering "twenty . . . [bales of cotton] raised" on described lands during a certain year, is not rendered uncertain and void by the fact that about one hundred bales were thus raised.—Citizens' Nat. Bank of Ennis v. First Guaranty State Bank of Palmer, Tex. Civ.App., 275 S.W. 860, 862.

Sufficiency of particular description

A mortgage covering a crop grown in a stated year on "one hundred . . . acres lying in the northwest part of the northwest quarter" of a described section "is so indefinite . . . as to render the mortgage void" if the whole quarter section referred to was cropped; but if only "approximately 108 acres" of such quarter section was cropped the description would be reasonably definite.—Hagen v. Dwyer, 162 N.W. 699, 700, 36 N.D. 346.

In Louisiana, under "Act No. 198 of 1918, which provides for . . . the manner of granting chattel mortgages," a description of a stock of goods and fixtures in general terms together with a statement of its location is sufficient, especially as between the parties.—Hooper v. Miller, 125 So. 77, 78, 12 La.App. 9.

Sufficient description

"Our stock of merchandise consisting of dry goods, shoes, clothing, groceries and hardware," where it was shown that the mortgagor was a well-known firm and had only one stock of goods, which was located in the town where the mortgage was executed.—In re Coleman & Brown, C.C.A.Ga., 2 F.2d 254, reversing, D.C., 291 F. 280.

Omission of "after-acquired property" clause

The fact that a mortgage on a stock of merchandise "does not contain the usual clause applicable to after-acquired property" does not invalidate the mortgage as to goods in stock when the mortgage was made.—Petition of McLaughlin, C.C.A. Mass., 1 F.2d 5, 7.

risdictions it has been held that as to a shifting stock of trade the description should identify the mortgaged chattels with such particularity as to permit their ascertainment without difficulty and uncertainty,⁷⁴ and that a description by general terms is insufficient.⁷⁵ Where the description of the property is otherwise sufficient, a failure to annex a contemplated schedule of the property does not render the description insufficient or affect the validity of the mortgage.⁷⁶

It has been held that a mortgage on property displayed in the market place must be in substantial harmony with the rules as to ownership, location and possession considered in § 64 supra,⁷⁷ and, if the description misstates or fails to state the place where the property is situated or the person in possession thereof, it is insufficient as against third persons;⁷⁸ however, the subsequent removal of the stock of goods to another building will not invalidate the mortgage when it suggests inquiries which, if pursued, would enable a third person to identify the mortgaged property.⁷⁹

§ 69. — Misdescription or False Description

An error in the description of mortgaged property is not fatal when the remaining description is otherwise sufficient to suggest inquiries enabling third persons to identify the property. A misstatement of the controlling descriptive element, or a wholly false or misleading description, is, however, fatal. A misdescription of a portion of the mortgaged property does not affect the portion correctly described.

An error in the description of the mortgaged property is not fatal when the part remaining is otherwise sufficient to suggest inquiries which, if pursued, would enable third persons to identify the property,⁸⁰ although a misstatement of the controlling element in the description is fatal.⁸¹ A mortgage has been upheld where the weight⁸² or number⁸³ of mortgaged chattels is understated, or a general description given which does not apply to all the units included under the mortgage.⁸⁴ A description which is misleading⁸⁵ or wholly false⁸⁶ vitiates the mortgage; but a misdescription of a portion of the property covered by the mortgage does not render the mortgage invalid as to the part which is correctly described.⁸⁷ The fact that by mistake the description includes in part property not intended to be conveyed by the mortgage does not operate to defeat the mortgage as to the part intended to be subjected thereto.⁸⁸

§ 70. — Curing Defective Description

A defective description may, and ordinarily must, be cured by a reformation of the instrument in equity or by a delivery of the property to the mortgagee except as against intervening rights; further, some defects may be supplied by the court from a construction of the instrument.

Ordinarily, as appears in the C.J.S. title Reformation of Instruments § 42, also 53 C.J. p 965 note 19, a material error in the description may be corrected in a court of equity, and, in order for a mortgagee to recover possession of mortgaged property which is erroneously described, he must resort to equity to have the instrument reformed;⁸⁹ but equity will not amend a mortgage entered into under a misapprehension of the facts so as to make an agreement which either of the parties might have declined to execute had both been cognizant of all the facts.⁹⁰ Where the mortgagee claims that after-acquired property was omitted from the description of the mortgaged property by mistake, he must show by clear and convincing proof that the true intention of the parties was not expressed in the mortgage, and that the omission was by mutual mistake.⁹¹

Delivery to mortgagee. A defective description is cured by subsequent delivery of the property to the mortgagee, as against persons who had no right or interest in the property at the time of the delivery,⁹² provided the delivery is such an actual transfer of possession and control of the property that if it were destroyed the loss would be that of the mortgagee.⁹³

Subsequent placing of property in location designated. Where property intended to be placed in a particular location is described as therein, it would seem that the description is good when the property is placed in such location,⁹⁴ at least as against persons with actual notice,⁹⁵ or except as against intervening rights,⁹⁶ and it is not necessary that the variance be corrected in equity.⁹⁷

(1) If the failure of an intelligent description constitutes a chattel mortgage an equitable mortgage, the mortgagee must nevertheless take possession of the property mortgaged to maintain his rights thereunder as against third persons.—Schell v. F. E. Ransom Coal & Grain Co., Mo.App., 79 S.W.2d 543.

(2) Equitable mortgages generally see supra § 48.

Joint possession by mortgagees

Where the mortgagor's entire herd of two thousand one hundred fifty sheep were mortgaged separately to two different mortgagees, one mortgage covering one thousand three hundred fifty sheep, the other eight hundred, the subsequent joint possession by the two mortgagees of the entire herd cured the defective mortgage descriptions which failed to distinguish the sheep covered by the respective mortgages, both as between the parties to the respective mortgages and as against a third person whose rights did not attach before the delivery of possession.—Bank of Vernal v. Bank of Grand Junction, 232 P. 923, 76 Colo. 448.

Contractor's mortgage on equipment and payments

A mortgage executed by a contractor describing the mortgaged property as all the contractor's equipment and materials used in connection with a particular construction contract and all moneys due or to become due under such contract, sufficiently described the property so as to make the mortgage a lien thereon after the mortgagee had taken possession thereof. — Southern Surety Co. v. Knowledge of a prior mortgage on the same property prevents such a one from complaining about an inaccurate description of the property.⁹⁸

Supplying defects. A mortgage will not be declared void on the ground of uncertainty, unless after reading and interpreting it in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, and after supplying or rejecting words necessary to carry into effect the reasonable intention of the parties, their intention cannot be fairly collected and effectuated;⁹⁹ but when the description of the property mortgaged is so deficient that the court cannot supply the defects without danger of making a different contract from that intended by the mortgagor, the mortgage is invalid.¹ However, where punctuation marks are omitted, in order to give effect to the intention of the parties the court may supply such marks. Likewise, where it is manifest from the context that a word has been omitted it may be supplied by the court if it can be ascertained with reasonable certainty.²

§ 71. — Questions of Law and Fact

The sufficiency of the description contained in a chattel mortgage is a question of law, but, if reasonable men could draw different conclusions from the evidence, the identity of the property is one of fact.

Questions held for jury

(1) Whether cattle were increase of mortgaged cattle.—Paska v. Saunders, 153 A. 451, 103 Vt. 204.

(2) Whether mortgage covering part of crop was void for uncertainty as to attaching creditor.—White v. Meiderhoff, 281 S.W. 101, 220 Mo. App. 171.

(3) Whether mortgagor had other cattle bearing the brands borne by the cattle actually mortgaged.—Zinn v. Denver Live Stock Commission Co., 187 P. 1033, 68 Colo. 274.

tel mortgage, so as to cure an insufficient description, is a question of fact.⁶ Where extrinsic evidence adduced to identify the property shows a misdescription rather than an insufficient one, the jury may determine whether or not it is sufficient, notwithstanding the false recitals, to put a third person on sufficient inquiry to lead to a discovery of the property covered by the mortgage.⁷

§ 72. Description of Debt or Liability Secured

While there must be a specification of the debt or liability secured, a general description sufficient to place third persons on inquiry and to preclude a substitution of other debts is in general all that is required.

While a chattel mortgage should specify the debt secured thereby,⁸ and it is usual for it to set forth the amount thereof,⁹ literal accuracy in describing the debt is not required;¹⁰ it is enough that there be a general description sufficient to embrace the liability intended to be secured and to place a third person on inquiry directing him to the proper source for more minute and particular information of the amount of the encumbrance;¹¹ and further, that the character of the debt and the extent of the encumbrance be shown with such reasonable certainty as to preclude the parties from substituting other debts than those described, and thereby making the mortgage a means of fraud on creditors.¹² A description may be sufficient as between the parties, although insufficient as against purchasers or creditors to afford constructive notice.¹³

Time of payment. In general in the absence of statute it is not necessary to state the time for performance of the mortgage obligation.¹⁴

*A statute invalidating a chattel mortgage, except as between the parties, unless it sets out the sum secured, the rate of interest to be paid, and the place and time of payment, has been construed not to require such facts to be expressly stated if they may be ascertained from the language of the mortgage as a whole.*¹⁵

Language sufficiently showing place of payment

(1) Where the residence of the parties and the location of the property mortgaged were stated in the Rules applicable to real estate mortgages. With regard to the sufficiency of the description of the debt, obligations, and undertakings intended to be secured thereby, a common-law chattel mortgage has been held to be governed by the same rules applicable to similar questions arising in connection with real estate mortgages.¹⁶ The same rule has been applied to the description in a chattel mortgage executed under the provisions of a statute allowing valid mortgages to be made of certain chattels, although unaccompanied by a change of possession, but requiring such mortgages to be executed, acknowledged, and recorded in all respects as mortgages of lands are required to be.¹⁷ mortgage to be in a certain county, and the mortgage was acknowledged, verified, and recorded in such county, it was held that the mortgage was not invalidated by the statute above referred to because of failure to set out specifically the place of payment, it being apparent from the mortgage that the debt secured thereby was payable in such county.—Garner v. Arizona Egyptian Cotton Co., 197 P. 231, 22 Ariz. 318.

(2) Sufficient compliance with the statutory requirement above referred to is had by a statement in the mortgage of the residence of the maker and payee of the note secured thereby, it being presumed that the note was payable at the residence of the payor.—Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas v. Live Stock & Agricultural Loan Co. of New Mexico, 250 P. 770, 31 Ariz. 116.

(3) But a chattel mortgage securing notes, not stating where the sum secured was payable, has been held invalid under the above statute where it did not appear whose notes the mortgage was given to secure, as the court could not presume that the mortgagee was the payee of the notes or that the mortgagor was the payor.—Albert Steinfeld & Co. v. Southern Arizona Bank & Trust Co., 236 P. 713, 28 Ariz. 242.

Sufficient descriptions

(1) That mortgage is given "to secure a note that I have this day executed to J. P. Owen," the mortgagee.—Owen v. George Cole Motor Co., 292 S.W. 1, 155 Tenn. 250.

(2) A recital in a mortgage that it secures up to a specified amount "any notes already signed and past due and given by the [mortgagor] . . . to the [mortgagee]."—State

Bank of Wheatland v. Bagley Bros., 11 P.2d 572, 581, 582, 44 Wyo. 244, rehearing denied 13 P.2d 564, 44 Wyo. 456.

"The validity of a mortgage depends upon the genuine character of the debt which the mortgage is to secure and not upon the description of the debt contained in the mortgage other than as required by . . . [statute], nor upon the form of the instrument given to represent the debt."—State Bank of Wheatland v. Bagley Bros., supra.

19. In California

(1) Under a statute providing that "in the event the mortgage is given to secure the payment of a note, . . . [it] is to contain a description of said note," it has been held that a mortgage which does not on its face give notice as to the due date of the debt secured thereby is insufficient as against third persons.—Kahrman v. Jones, 263 P. 537, 203 Cal. 254.

(2) Under the statute above referred to it has been held, however, that a chattel mortgage is not void because the name of the payee was not inserted in a copy of the note contained in the mortgage, where the mortgagee was in fact the payee of the note secured thereby and the mortgage provided that it was given as security for the payment of a named sum according to the terms of one certain promissory note of even date therewith.—Schaeffer v. Casey, C.C.A.Cal., 77 F.2d 808.

In Colorado

(1) Since certain sections of the Chattel Mortgage Act of Colorado referring to the extension of a mortgage and the continuation of the lien thereof "indicate, and are upon the assumption, that the maturity of the mortgage debt should be set forth in the mortgage," it appears that in that jurisdiction "a mortgage, in describing the mortgage debt, should give the date of its maturity."—Metropolitan State Bank v. Wright, 209 P. 804, 807, 72 Colo. 106.

(2) A chattel mortgage not stating

§ 73. — Note or Evidence of Debt

It is sufficient that the note secured be described with reasonable certainty without giving all of the particulars thereof unless it is so required by statute.

All the particulars of a note secured need not be stated in the mortgage if enough is given to identify it with reasonable certainty.¹⁸ Thus, in the absence of statutes to the contrary,¹⁹ an omission of the date,²⁰ amount,²¹ or time of payment²² is not fatal, nor even an omission of the names of the payee and maker,²³ the reason being that extrinsic evidence is admissible to identify the debt secured.²⁴ Further, where several notes are secured a statement of their gross amount is sufficient.²⁵

the due date of the note secured thereby is insufficient to put a third person on inquiry as to the date of maturity and such a person is warranted in concluding that the mortgage and note secured thereby became due and payable at the time of the execution of the mortgage, particularly when the mortgage additionally stated the amount of the debt owed incorrectly.—*Metropolitan State Bank v. § 74. — Future Indebtedness or Advances

The generally adopted rule is that the mortgage need not state on its face that it secures future indebtednesses or advances or specify the amount or time of accrual thereof, although the description should be sufficient to afford notice to third persons and to direct them to the proper source for further information.

While a contrary rule prevails in some jurisdictions,²⁶ in the absence of statutory requirements to the contrary,²⁷ or fraudulent intent, it is not, according to the weight of authority, necessary that a mortgage given to secure future advances should state such fact on its face.²⁸ However, according to some decisions a mortgage reciting as a present indebtedness the amount of future advances which it is intended to secure is void as to creditors.²⁹ Again, according to the weight of authority, it is not necessary to state the specific amount of such advances which it is intended to secure³⁰ or definitely to fix the time within which they are to accrue,³¹ although the description should at least be sufficient to afford notice to third persons, and to direct them to the proper source for more minute and specific information.³²

A provision that the mortgage shall constitute a lien for future advances does not impose an obligation on the mortgagee to make them.³³

Indemnity mortgages. The validity of a mortgage given to indemnify another against a future and contingent liability is not in the absence of statute³⁴ affected by the fact that the mortgage does not appear on its face to have been given for a contingent liability.³⁵

§ 75. — Misdescription of Debt

A misdescription, as distinguished from a false description, is not necessarily fatal, and in a proper case erroneous portions of the description may be disregarded.

In the absence of statutes to the contrary,³⁶ the weight of authority is that a misdescription in the mortgage of the nature of the debt is not necessarily fatal,³⁷ and a clerical inaccuracy which does

As between the parties

"Whatever contention, if any, might be made . . . by a third party" with respect to an insufficient description as to the amount of advances secured by a chattel mortgage, no such contention can be of any consequence between the parties to the mortgage, since "when the advances were made by . . . [the mortgagee] and accepted by . . . [the mortgagor], the amount became to that extent certain, by their own act."—Smith v. Thomas, 245 P. 399, 401, 42 Idaho 375.

Advances exceeding amount stated

It has been held that a mortgage to secure advances on an unplanted crop would be protected and upheld in a court of equity, although the advances exceeded the amount named in the mortgage, where the evident intent was to secure all that should be required for raising the crop.—Bell v. Radcliff, 32 Ark. 645.

Mortgage securing "any . . . indebtedness"

A mortgage given to secure a three thousand dollar note and "any other indebtedness that . . . [the mortgagor] may owe [the] mortgagees or their assigns during the time . . . [the] mortgage is in force" is sufficient to put a subsequent mortgagee on inquiry as to the exact amount of indebtedness secured thereby.—Lowden Sav. Bank v. Zeller, 194 N.W. 966, 196 Iowa 1205.

In New Hampshire, under a statute requiring a mortgage given to indemnify the mortgagee against any liability assumed, to state such liability specifically in the condition of the mortgage, a failure of a mortgage given to indemnify the mortgagees as sureties on a note to mention in the condition the fact that the mortgagees were sureties is not cured by a statement in the beginning of the mortgage that it is given in consideration of liability incurred for the mortgagor by the mortgagees.—Phillips v. Sufficient identifications of notes creating contingent liability

A chattel mortgage stating that it was given to secure the mortgagees against loss "because of her signature on 'notes,' bankable," given to a named motor company in full payment for a described automobile, has been held to sufficiently identify the notes signed by the mortgagee as surety.—Clark v. Ford, 201 S.W. 344, 346, 179 Ky. 797.

not in fact mislead may be disregarded;³⁸ but a wholly false description of the debts secured prevents foreclosure of the mortgage as drawn³⁹ and transfers no title to the property by virtue of which the mortgagee can assert a claim in an action at law.⁴⁰ In a proper case, however, the mortgagee may have the instrument reformed in a court of equity, if no rights are thereby cut off.⁴¹ The fact that a renewal note has been given is sufficient to account for a misdescription of the debt secured by a mortgage.⁴²

Although a mortgage appears on its face to be given as security for an absolute indebtedness, it is not rendered invalid merely because the debt is in fact contingent,⁴³ evidence being admissible to show the true nature of the obligation.⁴⁴

Erroneous portions of the description may be omitted and the true portions alone may be regarded, when that of itself is sufficient to designate the debt secured.⁴⁵

§ 76. — Misstatement of Amount

A mortgage is not invalidated in the absence of fraud by an understatement or overstatement of the amount secured unless a statute may otherwise provide.

Date of note

Where mortgage correctly stated the amount, but incorrectly stated the date of note secured it was not invalid.—Iowa Sav. Bank v. Graham, 181 N.W. 771, 192 Iowa 96—11 C.J. p 475 note 29 [b].

Unsigned note

A mortgage to secure payment of existing debts is not invalidated by the failure of the mortgagor to execute the note recited.—Farmers' Sav. Bank of Williamsburg v. Cash, 200 N.W. 603, 199 Iowa 597—10 C.J. p 475 note 29 [c].

Notes nonexistent

A mortgage securing up to a specified amount certain notes dated "August 5th, 1927 and Dec. 31st, 1927 and Dec. 31st, 1927 or any notes already signed and past due" is not rendered invalid by the fact that "the two notes thus mentioned as dated in December, 1927, were nonexistent."—State Bank of Wheatland v. Rate of interest and payee

Where a mortgage was given to secure a note bearing "10 per cent. interest" and executed by the mortgagor to its secretary and by him indorsed to the mortgagee, an erroneous recital in the mortgage that it was made to secure a note bearing "8 per cent. interest" and payable "to the mortgagee" does not render the mortgage invalid.—First Nat. Bank v. Oppenheimer, 212 P. 164, 165, 123 Wash. 290.

Party to whom debt owed misnamed

A mortgage in effect describing certain notes secured thereby as owed, or given, to the mortgagee is not rendered invalid because such notes were in fact owed and given by the mortgagor to a bank after being indorsed by the mortgagee as surety, the latter having accepted the mortgage to secure him against loss as such surety.—West Grove Sav. Bank v. Dunlavy, 181 N.W. 404, 190 Iowa 1054.

Mortgage appearing as cosigner of note

The fact that the note was not signed by the mortgagee, while the chattel mortgage securing the note contained a copy of the note in which by inadvertence the name of the mortgagee appeared as a cosigner, does not render the mortgage void or prevent it from sufficiently complying with the California statute relating to chattel mortgages.—Schaeffer v. Casey, C.C.A. Cal., 77 F.2d 808.

Cancellation and replacement of described note

A subsequent cancellation of the note described in the mortgage and substitution of a new note for the same amount containing an earlier maturity date does not render the mortgage void for uncertainty as to the debt secured thereby.—In re George Seton Thompson Co., C.C.A. Ill., 297 F. 934.

46. In Connecticut

(1) The purpose of a statute providing that, where a person loans money on a note secured by mortgage on personal property in which the sum of money loaned is stated to be greater than the amount actually loaned, the note and mortgage shall be void, "is not primarily the protection of the borrower against an exaction made possible by his necessity, but to insure the veracity fact that a chattel mortgage states a sum greater than the actual liability of the mortgagor to the mortgagee does not of itself render the mortgage void at law,⁴⁷ but an overstatement of the amount always requires an explanation,⁴⁸ and, as appears in the C.J.S. title Fraudulent Conveyances § 81, also 27 C.J. p 487 note 61, is a circumstance from which a jury may infer fraud, in which case the mortgage is rendered invalid as against creditors of the mortgagor;⁴⁹ but it will be presumed that the amount of the debt is correctly recited in the mortgage.⁵⁰

An understatement of the amount due does not affect the validity of the mortgage,⁵¹ but the sum stated limits the amount secured.⁵²

V. EXECUTION AND DELIVERY

§ 77. In General

Execution of a chattel mortgage in accordance with statutory provisions is ordinarily requisite to its validity as to third persons, but not as between the parties.

While a chattel mortgage not executed in the manner and form prescribed by statute is good as between the parties in the absence of express statutory provisions, to the contrary,⁵³ it is ordinarily held that statutory provisions as to execution must be strictly complied with in order to render a chattel mortgage valid as to third persons,⁵⁴ even though, under some authority, they have notice of the existence of the mortgage.⁵⁵ Accordingly, statutes providing that chattel mortgages shall be executed in like manner as mortgages of real estate must be strictly complied with.⁵⁶ Under a statute providing that a mortgage on a named type of goods shall be "absolutely void and of no effect or validity" if not executed as required, a mortgage not so executed is a nullity, and not merely voidable at the option of the injured party.⁵⁷

The application of these rules to particular elements in the execution of the instrument is considered at appropriate points in §§ 78-84 infra.

(2) Under the statute above referred to it has been held that a chattel mortgage and note secured thereby and described therein as in the amount of eighteen hundred dollars are not rendered invalid by the fact that when the note and mortgage were delivered to the mortgagee the latter had furnished the mortgagor with but seventeen hundred dollars in cash and services, where the mortgagee had bound himself by enforceable agreement to furnish the balance, as the entire transaction was regarded by the parties as a cash transaction.—Mozwish v. Sirus, supra.

(3) In spite of the statute above referred to, a note for two hundred and seventy-five dollars and a chattel mortgage for that amount to secure payment of a loan for two hundred and fifty dollars have been held valid.—Sinclair v. Miller, 68 A. 257, 80 Conn. 303.

Second mortgage not securing additional debt

A second chattel mortgage is not invalid merely because, by failing to disclose the fact that the debt it secured was also included in a first mortgage on other chattels, it appeared to secure an independent debt in addition to that secured by the first mortgage.—*Van Zele v. Notice of contents by broker

Instruments conveying both real and personal property, it has been held, must be executed as chattel mortgages in order to be valid as to the personal property conveyed.⁵⁸

Place of execution. A mortgage on property in one state cannot be said to show on its face that it was executed there, although it is headed with a reference to the state and a county thereof, where the signature of the mortgagor is witnessed by a notary of a named county in a named other state.⁵⁹

§ 78. Execution in Blank

Blanks in a mortgage delivered to the mortgagee may be filled by him in the manner contemplated by the parties.

An instrument may be a chattel mortgage even though it contains a blank.⁶⁰ A mortgagor who signs and delivers a blank chattel mortgage to the mortgagee thereby constitutes the mortgagee his agent to fill the blanks,⁶¹ in the absence of proof of fraud;⁶² but the mortgagee may exercise this authority only in the manner contemplated by the parties.⁶³

§ 79. Date

- a. Necessity and legal effect
- b. Presumptions as to date

a. Necessity and Legal Effect

Apart from statutory requirement, a chattel mortgage may be valid although undated; hence a mistake in dating, or antedating without fraudulent intent, will not void it.

In the absence of a statute requiring it, a date is not necessary to the validity of a chattel mortgage;⁶⁴ hence neither a mere mistake in dating the instrument⁶⁵ nor antedating it without fraudulent intent⁶⁶ will void it.

b. Presumptions as to Date

The date of a chattel mortgage is presumably the date of execution, the presumption being prima facie.

While the date of a chattel mortgage is presumably the date of the execution,⁶⁷ this presumption is merely prima facie.⁶⁸

Date of execution. An undated mortgage, in the absence of proof of the date of its execution, cannot be assumed to have been executed prior to the date when it was proved by the subscribing witness.⁶⁹

§ 80. Signature and Seal

- a. Signature
- b. Seal

a. Signature

A mortgage is not invalidated by informalities in the signature, as where the mortgagor does not sign in his own proper name, or where the signature is by mark, or his name is misspelled. Signature by the mortgagor only is ordinarily all that is required.

Under a statute so providing, a mortgage must

"Though the date of . . . [the] execution [of the instrument] is not stated, yet it sets out verbatim the note which it secures, thereby giving the date of the obligation and the date of the maturity thereof, and must evidently have been executed either on the same date with the note or at some time between that date and the time when the affidavit of good faith and the acknowledgment, both of which are dated, were attached to it. be signed by the mortgagor.⁷⁰ Since, as appears in § 49 supra, a valid mortgage may, apart from statute, be created by parol, informalities in the signature of a written mortgage will not invalidate it;⁷¹ the rule that a person is said to "sign" a document when he writes or marks thereon something in evidence or token of his intention to be bound by its contents, and that any mark is sufficient if it shows an intent to be bound by the document, has been applied to chattel mortgages.⁷² The validity of a mortgage has been held unaffected by the fact that the mortgagor does not sign the instrument with his own proper name;⁷³ but the mortgagor's signature must be sufficiently identified,⁷⁴ and must be affixed with an intent to be bound by the mortgage.⁷⁵

In accordance with these rules, courts have held mortgages valid where the signature was in an assumed name,⁷⁶ or, in the absence of statutes prohibiting such signature,⁷⁷ by mark,⁷⁸ or by another at the mortgagor's request and in his presence,⁷⁹ or, at least as between the parties,⁸⁰ where the mortgagor's name was wrongly or erroneously stated⁸¹ or misspelled.⁸²

The necessity for attestation of the mortgagor's signature is considered infra § 81, description of parties generally in § 55 supra, and the record of a mortgage executed in a wrong or fictitious name as notice in § 164 infra.

Signing schedule or affidavit. Where a statute requires that a mortgage be subscribed, signing at the bottom of a schedule annexed thereto has been held not necessary;⁸³ where it is required that a chattel mortgage be accompanied by an affidavit, it has been held that a chattel mortgage, when duly recorded, is valid, although signed at the end of the appended affidavit, and not at the end of the mortgage proper.⁸⁴

Alteration of mortgage. Where a mortgage, subscribed by the mortgagor in conformity with statute, is altered by the parties by an interlineation changing part of the property covered, the mortgage is valid without a resubscription.⁸⁵

Where a mortgagor's signature by mark is required to be witnessed, the witness has been required to sign his name as witness, rather than sign by mark.⁸⁶

*The failure of a wife to sign a mortgage executed by her husband before his marriage does not affect its validity.*⁸⁷

Signature by a trustee, although material on the question of acceptance by him, is not essential to the validity of a deed of trust by way of mortgage.⁸⁸

A mortgage in the form of an indenture may be valid even though executed by the mortgagor alone.⁸⁹

b. Seal

At common law, a chattel mortgage need not be under seal although it may be.

It is not, at common law, necessary to the validity of a chattel mortgage that a seal be affixed to it,⁹⁰ although the instrument is not vitiated by adding a seal unnecessarily;⁹¹ but where the statute requires a seal it is essential.⁹²

§ 81. Attestation

a. In general

b. Competency of witnesses

a. In General

In the absence of statutes to other effect, attestation is not essential to the validity of a chattel mortgage, at least between the parties and as to others having actual notice; but it is essential, under some statutes, to admission to record. Strict compliance with statutory requirements regarding attestation has been required.

Attestation of a chattel mortgage has been defined as the solemn or official declaration of the fact of the identity of the mortgagor's signature.⁹³

In the absence of statutory provisions to other effect, attestation or witnessing is not essential to the validity of a chattel mortgage, at least as between the parties to the mortgage, or as to others having actual notice or knowledge thereof;⁹⁴ nor, apart from statute, is attestation essential to its admission to registration;⁹⁵ but under some statutes, attestation is essential to the admission of a chattel mortgage to record.⁹⁶ Strict compliance with statutory requirements regarding attestation has been required.⁹⁷

Crop mortgages

(1) In a jurisdiction where a growing crop is considered to be part of the realty, and two attesting witnesses, one an official, are required for admission of real property mortgages to record, a mortgage on such a crop is not entitled to record unless so attested.—Farmers' Warehouse Co. v. Conformity to statute as to realty mortgage

A statutory provision that a mortgage of personal property with retention of possession by the mortgagor shall be "executed, acknowledged and recorded as mortgages of

Attestation by mark. A mortgage is not invalidated because attested by witnesses making their marks unless a statute prohibits the execution of chattel mortgages in that mode.⁹⁸

A mortgagor's signature by mark has been required, under governing statutes, to be witnessed.⁹⁹

Attestation by acknowledgment, as provided for by statute, is sufficient where the certificate of acknowledgment, whatever its form, reasonably discloses the identity of the mortgagor's signature.¹

"Notarial act." A statute providing that a chattel mortgage, "in order to affect third persons without notice . . . must be passed by notarial act," has been construed in several cases.²

The correction of a defective attestation renders the instrument valid, as to third persons only from the date of such correction.³

land" shows the legislative intention "that a chattel mortgage should conform, in all respects, to the manner of execution and acknowledgment of a mortgage of land," so that, if another provision requires all conveyances of land to be "attested by two witnesses," a chattel mortgage must also be so attested.—Bickart v. Sanditz, 136 A. 580, 582, 105 Conn. 766.

Affidavit by one not witness

Under a statutory provision that a mortgage "must be executed in the presence of, and attested by, or proved before, a notary public, or justice," an affidavit of execution made before a notary public by one who was not an attesting witness is insufficient as "'proof' which may substitute the due attestation."—In re Smith, D.C.Ga., 281 F. 574, 575, applying Georgia statute.

Making known contents; signature of witness

Under statutory provisions that the execution of the instrument shall be acknowledged or proved, and that "it is sufficient if it be 'proved' before one of the officials named in the statute, by one or more of the subscribing witnesses . . . that the grantor 'signed, sealed and delivered it as his voluntary act and deed,' a certificate of proof of execution . . . is not defective either for failure of the officer to certify that he made known the contents of the instrument to the subscribing witness making the proof, nor for lack of signature of the said subscribing witness."—Van Houten v. Sufficiency of signature of attesting witness see supra § 80 a.

Superfluous signature

Where a person signing a crop mortgage by mark has no mortgageable interest, so that his name and mark are superfluous, the mortgage is not void because his signature by mark is witnessed by one witness instead of two, as required by statute.—Bell v. Central Bank of Imperial Valley, 265 P. 551, 89 Cal.App. 551.

1. Okl.—First Nat. Bank v. Devore, 234 P. 734, 110 Okl. 283.

Mixed mortgage

Where acknowledgment dispenses with the necessity of attesting witnesses in mortgages of real estate, attestation of a mortgagor's mark, in a mortgage of both realty and personalty, is unnecessary, in order to pass the personal property, if the instrument is acknowledged before a proper officer by whom it is duly certified.—Breene v. McCrary, 52 Ala. 154.

2. Meaning of "notarial act"

"The notarial act referred to . . . is one signed and executed by the mortgagor before a notary public, who also signs, and two attesting witnesses."—Wessell v. Kite, La.App., 142 So. 363, 365.

A mortgage not signed before a notary public is insufficient as a notarial act although signed by the mortgagor in the presence of two witnesses and proved by affidavit of one witness before a notary, since it does not "possess the self-proving qualities of a notarial act."—Wessell v. Kite, La.App., 142 So. 363, 365.

As between the parties a chattel mortgage is valid although not pass-

b. Competency of Witnesses

While there is some disagreement, it is more commonly held that neither the mortgagee, nor a stockholder in a corporation mortgagee, nor a partner in a partnership mortgagee, is competent to attest the mortgage; but an agent, employee, or relative of the mortgagee may be a competent witness.

The general rule that all persons of proper age and sound mind, who are not proved to be disqualified, are competent subscribing witnesses to the execution of a written instrument has been applied to chattel mortgages.⁴ While it has been held that a mortgagee⁵ or a stockholder in a mortgagee corporation⁶ is not disqualified from attesting a chattel mortgage because of his interest, and that the fact that the official witness is a "party at interest" does not affect the validity of the mortgage as between the parties,⁷ more common holdings are that a person is incompetent to attest a mortgage of which he is the mortgagee,⁸ or which is executed to a ed by notarial act.—Dainello v. McCoy, 131 So. 608, 14 La.App. 358.

As against third persons without notice, a mortgage not passed by notarial act is invalid although recorded.—Thigpen v. Wall Printing Corporation, La.App., 145 So. 714—Wessell v. Kite, La.App., 142 So. 363—Leiber v. Watts, 139 So. 778, 19 La. App. 650, overruling Shevlin v. Grimmer, 119 So. 894, 10 La.App. 393—Dainello v. McCoy, 131 So. 608, 14 La.App. 358—Union Securities Co. v. Neal, 121 So. 316, 9 La.App. 494.

Who may attack authenticity of act

Landlord claiming lien on automobile covered by mortgage, not being party to notarial act, could attack its authenticity.—Dainello v. McCoy, 131 So. 608, 14 La.App. 358.

6. Ala.—Morris v. Attalla Bank, 45 So. 219, 153 Ala. 352.

Later statute not applicable

The validity of an executed chattel mortgage competently attested by a stockholder in the mortgagee corporation is not affected by the subsequent taking effect of a statute disqualifying interested persons from attesting such instruments.—Ames Bank v. Lehr, 130 P. 238, 37 Okl. 1.

partnership in which he is a partner,⁹ or to a corporation in which he is a stockholder;¹⁰ but the fact that the attesting witness is an agent or an employee,¹¹ or a relative,¹² of the mortgagee does not disqualify him.

Attestation may be made by a notary public in his individual, as well as in his official, capacity.¹³ If he acts officially, it is no objection that he is also attorney for the mortgagee,¹⁴ or that his official seal is not affixed to his attestation.¹⁵

Proof of disqualification. It has been held that a mortgage purporting on its face to be duly executed is properly received for record, and that disqualification of the witnesses must be shown by proof in the case.¹⁶

(2) Acts making acknowledgment unnecessary

(3) Reacknowledgment

(1) In General

A chattel mortgage may be valid and binding between the parties even though not acknowledged or defectively acknowledged; but acknowledgment is ordinarily necessary as against creditors, subsequent purchasers, and other third persons, particularly those not having notice of the mortgage, unless they are not within the protection of the statutes requiring acknowledgment. Acknowledgment is commonly essential to the admission of a chattel mortgage to record.

While it has been broadly stated that acknowledgment before an officer is not essential to the valid execution of a mortgage of personal property,¹⁷ and as between the parties to the mortgage, it may be valid and binding even though defectively acknowledged or not acknowledged,¹⁸ under the statutory provisions concerning chattel mortgages, acknowledgment is ordinarily essential to the validity and effectiveness of the mortgage as against creditors,¹⁹ subsequent purchasers,²⁰ subsequent lienors,²¹ encumbrancers,²² and "third persons" or "third parties" generally.²³ However, an unacknowledged or defectively acknowledged chattel mortgage is valid and effective as against third persons not within recording or other statutes requiring acknowledgment for the protection of third persons;²⁴ so, where such a statute names the classes of persons to which it applies, acknowledgment is not essential to the validity or effectiveness of the mortgage as against a person not coming within any of such classes, such as, under particular statutes, a creditor taking a mortgage to secure a pre-existing indebtedness,²⁵ a prior mortgagee,²⁶ creditors of a subsequent purchaser who assumed the

(2) Acts Making Acknowledgment Unnecessary

Acknowledgment may be made unnecessary by due witnessing, or the mortgagee's taking possession before third parties' rights intervene, but not by an affidavit of good faith.

The necessity of acknowledgment may, under some authorities, be removed by having the instrument duly witnessed,³⁴ or by the mortgagee's taking possession of the mortgaged property before the rights of third parties intervene.³⁵

The presence of an affidavit of good faith does not render acknowledgment unnecessary.³⁶

(3) Reacknowledgment

A mortgage invalidated by alteration after being acknowledged must be reacknowledged before being again placed on record; but reacknowledgment is not required, in order to effect a lien, when mortgaged chattels are removed to another state.

A mortgage invalidated by an alteration by consent of the parties after having been acknowledged, must be reacknowledged before being again placed on the record.³⁷ A mortgage altered to include other property and then reacknowledged has been held to take effect, as to the property originally included, from the time of the original acknowledgment.³⁸

Where mortgaged chattels are removed from the state where the mortgage was acknowledged and registered, reacknowledgment by the mortgagor in the state to which the property is brought is not necessary in order to effect a lien on the property.³⁹

Statutes relative to acknowledgment of chattel mortgages are required by some authorities to be strictly, by others liberally, construed; but substantial compliance is sufficient.

Statutes relative to the acknowledgment of chattel mortgages are required by some authorities to be strictly construed, as being in derogation of the common law⁴⁰ and the statute of frauds;⁴¹ but a broad and liberal construction to uphold the validity of a mortgage has been required by other authority,⁴² and a substantial compliance with the statutory requirements as to acknowledgment is held sufficient.⁴³
